Trenton School Opens With Very Few Tears

School opened at Trenton School Monday morning with 390 students enrolled, most of whom were glad to get back to school, despite their denials.

Excited murmurs went around the halls as children whispered, "Who do you have this year?" After spending a morning in an unwanted teacher's room, they came out saying, "I sure am glad I have her. She's the best teacher here."

In the first grade there was awe and anticipation, and a few tears from children who dreaded to "Leave mama".

One little girl went home telling her mother, "I love my teacher."

And another, asked why he cried that morning, replied, "If I'd known how much fun it was going to be, I wouldn't have cried."

From all reports it seems that the first graders think that school is going to be a great big playground.

It's a shame to think of the shock they're going to get, when they find that there's also work to be done.

According to the teachers, school opened with its usual confusion and in a week or two, everything will settle down to a normal happy year.
