NURSE VISITS SENIOR CLASS

On Wednesday, February 12, a nurse, Mrs. Sarah Skinner, from the Lenoir Memorial Hospital in Kinston came to talk about nursing to the Senior girls interested in this profession. Irene Eubanks, a former graduate of Jones Central, who is in training to be a nurse, came with Mrs. Skinner.

Mrs. Skinner told the girls what subjects were required before a person could become a student nurse at the Lenoir Memorial Hospital School of Nursing.

Mrs. Skinner told some of the rules and regulations that the students have to follow. For example she said that the students have to have the lights out by 10:30 p. m. on week nights and, by 11:00 p. m. on week-ends. She enumerated, the courses that are required for graduation and the number of hours and the cost per student for the entire three years of training. She also mentioned the fact that Lenoir Memorial Hospital School of Nursing is an accredited school.

During the question period that followed the girls showed interest by asking what different fields were open to a student after graduation from this school, and what were the advantages of being trained in a small school of nursing.

JOYCE WHALEY TO PLAY IN TOURNAMENT

Joyce Whaley, veteran senior guard on the Jones Central team, has received a bid to play on the East Team in the girls' East-West All-Star Tournament to be held in Lincoln in March.

The All-Star game will be played on Saturday night March 15. A squad of 14 players will participate in the post-season second annual affair. Each team will be guests in private homes in Lincoln from Wednesday through Saturday, giving them three days of practice.

Joyce has not been able to play in the last part of the season games due to a broken bone in her right hand, however, her hand is almost well now and she is looking forward to participating in the

Jones Agent Outlines Need, Requirements for Successful Farm Marketing Operation

By M. B. Wright
Assistant County Agent
Jones County

Farmers in this area face not only area-wide and nation-wide, but also, in many cases world-wide competition in marketing their farm products. Any changes in farming by our farmers must be guided by this competitive market situation.

There are three things which a market must have in order to succeed. It must have a sufficient volume of products to enable it to operate efficiently; it must have a dependable supply in order to attract buyers; and the products going through the market must be of a quality necessary to satisfy

NEW REFRIGERATOR FOR HOME ECONOMICS

The Home Economics Department of Jones Central High School has purchased a new General Electric refrigerator. The new refrigerator is a refrigerator-freezer combination and has roll-out shelves.

the consumer.

Many adjustments have been made in the system of marketing our farm products during the past few years; however, we must make additional changes in our marketing system to provide for efficient marketing of our present production and any possible changes in production.

In some cases new markets must be established and located at proper places with adequate facilities. Our markets must be of a size necessary to allow for efficient operation, and this efficiency must be exploited in order to compete on a national market.

Our farmers must produce quality
