Kinston Native is Author of New Book

Dr. G. Ray Jordan, theology professor at Emory University, a native of Kinston, is author of "Prayer That Prevails".

In his new book, the professor discusses prayer from five angles: why, how, when, for what, and to whom one prays. He states: "Any individual can study prayer and cultivate it with assurance of ever-deepening understanding and ever-increasing effectiveness."

Dr. Jordan contends that "all of us are praying all the time, since prayer is desire, but effectiveness requires unity of will, mind, and heart, through which we may discover the plan of God and give ourselves to His purpose."

The professor is author of fifteen earlier textbooks and religious guidebooks such as "You Can Preach!", "The Emerging Revival", and "Look at the Stars". His most recent book, published in 1955, was "Beyond Despair". Seven of his publications have been selections of the Pulpit Book Club.

Dr. Jordan holds degrees from Duke, Emory, Yale, and Lincoln Memorial universities. Before joining the faculty of the Candler School of Theology as Professor of Homiletics in 1954, he served Methodist pastorates in Charlotte, Winston-Salem, High Point and Greensboro.

Last Saturday in the biennial County Convention of Jones County Democrats Cecil S. Hargett was elected chairman of the County Democrat Executive Committee, succeeding R. P. Bender. Named to serve with Hargett were Vice Chairman Mrs. John Larkins and Secretary Rudolph Pelletier.

Precinct Chairmen who will serve for the coming two years include Rudolph Pelletier in White Oak Precinct, John Booth in Pollocksville Precinct, Carey Waters in Piney Grove Precinct, Donald P. Brock in Trenton Precinct, T. D. Holloman in Beaver Creek Precinct, W. L. Dail in Chinquapin Precinct, J. R. Westbrook in Cypress Creek Precinct and Hargett from Tuckahoe Precinct.

Jones County was authorized to send 14 delegates to the State Convention this week in Raleigh, and it developed that exactly that number was in attendance at the county convention so they were all named delegates.

They included George R. Hughes, Levi Mallard, Levin Eubanks, D. W. Koonce, W. B. Yates, P. B. Abbott, W. M. Whitaker, Pelletier, Westbrook, Booth, Hargett, Holloman, Bender and Brock.

The only further action of the convention aside from naming delegates was a resolution to send a "Get Well" telegram to State Democratic Executive Committee Chairman John Larkins, who was convalescing at Wrightsville Beach from a bursitis attack in his hand-shaking arm.

Delegate Donald Brock, Larkins' law partner, was instructed to send the telegram. In the absence of any Democratic Party funds in the county treasury, Brock decided to wait and deliver the "Get Well" sentiments in person, rather than having the telegram charged to the telephone bill of the ailing chairman and himself.
