Each year as school opening time has rolled around since 1954 I have been the victim of a nervous tension that must be shared by many million southerners both black and white. Each year trouble is not only feared, but expected and with regularity trouble has arrived. The South has been blasphemed around the world for its refusal to bow humbly before the illegal acts of a power maddened supreme court.

But the South still stands, battered but undefeated. Treason has been committed in North Carolina by cowardly school boards in Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem but everywhere else from Virginia to the Gulf of Mexico the battle line has been held and the war is being won. The Conference of Chief Justices of the 48 states has adopted a strong resolution, attacking the recent wrongful decisions of the supreme court. Congress almost summoned up enough courage to put this socialist tribunal into its proper place but failed because of gutless politicians who should crawl upon the floors of congress rather than strut.

No where, not even in the wildest ranks of the one-race gospel crowd is there a fanatic so "gone" as to accept a national referendum on this subject. They know, as every congressman on Capital Hill knows, that a national vote on the subject of segregation by race would pass so fast and so overwhelmingly that it would jar the very foundations of the NAACP and its stooge, the supreme court.

But ultimately that bridge will have to be crossed. The South is not going to mix its public schools, no matter if there is a display of brute force as at Little Rock and no matter if there are a few traitors among us as at Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem. All the finely worded brainwashing of the newspapers, the pulpit, the radio and TV cannot change the temper of the people. Schools will be closed.

Governor Luther Hodges, who abdicated in the fight against the supreme court, and accepted the legalized integration of the Pearsall Plan explains his act by saying he accepted the advice of associates that the people of North Carolina would accept integration rather than closed schools. He was wrong, his associates and advisors were wrong and time will prove this far more clearly than these few words.

Clarence Mitchell, director of NAACP activities in Washington, in commenting upon the Faubus victory in Arkansas has this to say of North Carolina: "In some parts of the country, his election will make the decent people more active in the effort to prevent this kind of political situation from developing. I think that in a state like North Carolina, for example, there are many people who surely know that if a movement similar to the one in Arkansas got underway, it would be the end of them politically."

Question: "You mean it would be the end of them politically because the negro vote would go Republican?"

"No. Because if the segregationists got a real hold in North Carolina, it would destroy a lot of people not openly in favor of integration, but who recognize that it is inevitable. If the worst elements got control of the political machinery in North Carolina it would mean that only a segregationist could win. I don't think the people of North Carolina want that."

Question: "Why not?"

"Certainly my impression of the top officials in North Carolina is that they are not beating drums in favor of integration. But they know that it must come, and they know from the standpoint of national importance as a state, it is much better for North Carolina to be in a column of law and order than in a column of diehard segregationists."

So even this "Big Nigger" of the Washington NAACP office realizes that if North Carolina voters had an opportunity to vote between an avowed segregationist and a

Congress Has Failed

The federalists, or socialists will be pleased with the record of the 85th Congress for it failed to strike down any of the many forces which gnaw at the vitals of our republic and in most instances moved further toward the totalitarian concepts which hide behind the "common man" kind of "promised Land".

Taxes were increased for social security—26 per cent, but benefits to the sheep who are being shorn were increased only seven per cent.

The Supreme Court, the Communist Party, the NAACP, the Teamsters' Union and Walter Reuther still control the country despite endless congressional fulminations on these assorted threats to republican government.

The power to legislate has been abdicated to the supreme court, control of labor has in too many instances been left in the hands of racketeers, minority problems have become the property of the fanatics who prosper behind the dark veil of the NAACP and foreign policy has been erected around the dollar mark.

In leaving the supreme court unrestrained the 85th Congress was guilty of its worst crime of omission. For it has been the calloused paw of these nine politicians in judicial robes that has held high the hand of totalitarianism in every conflict between the republican government our Constitution once guaranteed and the state socialism which public greed has saddled us with.

Congress has the power, but it lacked the guts to set right the floundering ship of state. Small bore politicians posturing as great statesmen have preened themselves before the public and then meekly stolen away into the night when confronted with the forked tongues of racket-filled labor unions, the twisted fanaticisms of the race amalgamators and the brute force of the "One Worlders".

The 85th Congress passed a lot of bills, but its record lies in the wastebasket. The bills which a minority managed to get to the floor only to see die, done to death by political cowards, opportunists and flapping intellectuals of the Douglas-Humphrey-Neubenger ilk.

Conservative, republican government is desperately ill; many say fatally ill and the one "doctor" who has the power to prescribe the medicine for recovery has failed to lift its hand to paper.

Even so conservative a hand as that of Congressman L. H. Fountain has affixed his signature to a report which supports the vast federal bureaucracy in its penetration into practically every sphere of life that remains in this republic of once sovereign states.

The Prepared Insult

On May 17, 1954 the United States Supreme Court heaped the worst insult ever written upon an entire people. It said to the race of George Washington Carver, Booker T. Washington, Robert Russa Moton, Robert L. Vann and Ralph Bunche: "You and your children cannot learn from identical books, from better trained teachers unless they are mixed in classrooms with white children."

Of course, that statement is nowhere in the decision which these white men on the nation's highest and once most-respected court wrote. But the insult is there. It was put there by the suave lawyers of the NAACP, who needed "results" to collect dues. They took a socialist textbook, a prevailing climate of political cowardice and strategic blocs of negro votes and fashioned from them the fabric which the supreme court stitched into the ultimate slander.

This paper, bitterly and everlastingly opposed as it is to the mixing of the white and black races in our schools and at every other social level denies the brutal implications of this NAACP-inspired slur which was adopted unanimously by the nine nitwits on the supreme court.

The negro parent, the racial agitator,

Deny Its Own?

The pressing question of this week on the segregation front is whether or not the United States Supreme Court will Deny Its Own order of 1955 in which it foisted the job of public school integration onto the federal district courts.

If the court were composed of men of either intelligence or character, which it most assuredly is not, one could logically assume that it would over turn the appellate court's reversal of Judge Lemley's decision to postpone the forcing of negroes into Little Rock High for 2½ years.

But since this court is composed of political lackeys and proven socialists who are determined to mongrelize the nation in the pious name of the "common man", it is far more logical to assume that it will Deny Its Own decision of just three years ago by saying, now that the district judge is less qualified than itself to determine how slowly or how quickly this political pandering must take place.

If it follows this "logical" pattern of biting its own tail, then it will have assumed the responsibility of adjudicating each and every integration squabble in every school district in the nation.

It will also have assumed the position of demanding humble and immediate subservience to its whim by every member of the federal judiciary.

Power is a maddening thing. Power such as the supreme court has is certain to corrupt any but men who are dedicated to the highest sense of public service. This court has demonstrated beyond doubt that its dedication is to venal, gutter-level politics rather than to the republican government once guaranteed by our noble Constitution.

A Community Loss

The unexpected death Sunday of Verder Leroy Pollock was not only a tragic blow to his family and close friends but was also A Community Loss in the very finest possible use of that frequently over-worked phrase.

A description we heard of Pollock that is an epitaph each of us could be proud of was, "He wasn't the kind of fellow who talked a lot. When he saw something that needed doing, he simply got busy and did it."

His church, his civic interests, his deep love for his native county and its people were characteristics that made Pollock a valuable citizen. This abiding interest in and willingness to do something for his county and its citizens when added to the gentle spirit of his entire life combined to make Pollock one of Trenton's best liked men.

No man is irreplaceable, and Pollock would have been the first to insist upon the truth of this, but Trenton and Jones County will join with his family in missing him and in needing his help and advice for a long time to come.

the soothing religionists and the Joe Nathan Daniels breed of newsmen who preach the integration sermon repeat the supreme slander of the supreme court.

Negroes have vast capacities for learning, great natural capabilities, qualities peculiar to their culture and heritage that are noble and needed by the South and the rest of the nation, but the negro cannot reach his goal by imitating white men and mongrelizing his race.

America is a land of proud minorities. True, many have been segregated for many different reasons. But they have risen to the level of equality not by force of law but by force of character and force of accomplishment. This is the only way the negro can ever attain equality.
