Larkins Unanimously OK'd by Senate Sub-Committee Tuesday

Trenton Attorney John D. Larkins crossed one more in the series of hurdles between him and the newly created federal judgeship for the Eastern District of North Carolina Tuesday when a sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee gave its unanimous approval to his appointment.

Larkins was recommended by both North Carolina senators, Sam Ervin and Everett Jordan, and last week was nominated by President Kennedy.

The remaining hurdles — approval by the full judiciary committee and the senate itself, are expected to come with the same ease that the sub-committee voted on Tuesday, since there has been no public opposition to Larkins' appointment.

When the final senate approval comes Larkins will share with Judge Algernon Bulter of Clinton the responsibility for the federal courts in Wilmington, Fayetteville, Raleigh, Wilson, New Bern, Washington and Elizabeth City.

Prizes will be offered for champions in each breed, and for the top hogs from all breeds in the show. Full particulars and catalogs may be obtained by writing Outlaw, at Frosty Morn.

Hampshire Breeders to Hold Type Conference in January in Kinston

The exact dates of the type conference of the Hampshire breeders has not yet been set but it is expected to be in mid-January.

The conference will bring to Kinston a large percentage of the top Hampshire breeders in the nation, who will, of course, exhibit and offer for sale some of the finest animals of the breed in the world.

Senator Sam Ervin Comments On Foreign Aid Program

Senate debate during the early part of August has centered on three areas of legislation which are foreign aid, criminal penalties; for airline hijackers, and appropriations bills for the Defense Department; the Health, Education and Welfare Department; and the Independent Agencies. During two days Senator Proxmire conducted a one-man debate against the nomination of Lawrence O'Connor to the Federal Power Commission.

FOREIGN AID

At this session of Congress a new plan has been submitted to persuade Congress to place the foreign aid program on a long-term basis and to surrender to an executive agency the power of the purse. Under the Constitution the power of purse is vested in the Congress.

If Congress enacts into law the provision which authorizes those who administer foreign aid to finance the program for 5 years from borrowings from the Treasury, the Congress will be surrendering a power, which the Constitution contemplates that the Congress alone should exercise, to an agency of the executive branch of the government.

In the Senate debate over this provision, Senator Aiken, a long time advocate of foreign aid programs and a former advocate of this Treasury borrowing provision, said that the difference between the present financing of foreign aid and the new plan will be simply this "that for the next five years Congress would have a right to look into the stall where the horse used to be."

Should the new plan be adopted, if the President should choose to veto a Congressional disapproval of any part of the foreign aid program, Congress would have to muster a two-thirds vote to carry out it wishes. At the present time Congress can do this by a simple majority vote.

I have made a diligent effort to study the foreign program. My study has left me with an abiding conviction that foreign aid harms our country and the free world more than it helps it.

To me the most appalling result of our foreign aid program has been its effect upon those who are charged with the responsibility for our diplomacy and foreign policy. Instead of engaging in constructive thinking, they have accepted the foreign aid program as a 'sub-foreign policy.' Equally appalling is the fact that the United States has actually borrowed a substantial part of the money which it has loaned or given away to other nations. In 1961-62 it will do so again.

If an individual were to persist in borrowing money for the purpose of giving it away, his family would procure the appointment of a guardian to manage his affairs. It is high time that Congress should exercise some commonsense and put similar restraints on the Federal Government.

Fall Cultural Practices for Tobacco Nematode Control

by W. E. Barnes
Assistant Farm Agent

Good fall cultural practices are important steps in controlling nematodes in tobacco lands. Diseases caused by nematodes are costing flue-cured growers more money than any other tobacco disease.

What Can Be Done?

The first important step is to make a thorough survey to determine the severity of nematode in this year's crop. This should be done immediately after completing the harvest.

When the survey has been made the stalks should be cut and plowed out, exposing the roots of the old plants to the sun for drying. This will kill many nematodes and stop several generations from developing.

A week or two after the plants have been plowed out, a section harrow can be used to further expose roots to the sun.

A few hours in the field digging up and examining the roots of every twentieth plant in every tenth row will give you a good idea as to the nematode population in this year's crop. If the infestation is found to be severe it will be necessary to fumigate the soil before setting tobacco into the field again without devoting this land for several years to nematode resistant crops.

The results of experiments and farm demonstrations indicate that certain management practices such as plowing out tobacco stubbles immediately following harvest and the rotation of tobacco with nematode resistant crops will give good nematode control.

If it is necessary to fumigate the soil before setting the next crop it may not be necessary to do this year after year if good management practices are followed.

It must be remembered that soil fumigation pays only in fields where nematodes are a problem. In fields where the nematode population is low the use of fumigants might result in a reduction in yield rather than an increase.

Therefore, it is suggested to make a careful analysis of the nematode problem in each field, and based on this analysis plan a control program.

Land Transfers

Jones County Register of Deeds Bill Parker reports the recording in his office during the past week of the following land transfers:

Last week Kinston Policeman Rufus McNeal won top honors in pistol competition held in Winston-Salem at the annual convention of North Carolina Negro Policemen.

Infernal Quadrangle Replaces Eternal Triangle in Shooting

Recorder Emmett Wooten is frequently confronted with domestic issues that stem from the "Eternal Triangle" but last Friday he had to reach a conclusion that came from the mixed stories of an "Infernal Quadrangle".

Wilson Griffin of the Falling Creek section got shot in the heel.

He signed warrants against his mother-in-law, Mrs. Lulu Wellington, and against David Southerland of Kinston route 3.

Griffin told the court that his mother-in-law inflicted the wound with a pistol handed to her by Southerland, who was contesting Griffin for the affections of Mrs. Griffin.

Griffin said his mother-in-law had never liked the idea of him marrying her daughter, and had tried everything she could to break up their happy home.

After he had been shot in the heel by his mother-in-law Griffin said Southerland—using the same pistol—waved it in his face and repeatedly told Mrs. Griffin to "Tell him who you love! Tell him who you love!"

The judge fined Mrs. Wellington $25 and costs, ordered her to pay the $7 doctor bill and pay her son-in-law $25 for time lost from work.

Southerland was given a choice between 3 months in jail or payment of a $100 fine, but the judge told Southerland that he would materially reduce the fine if he brought in the gun used in the shooting.

Four Break-ins Hit Kinston in 2 Nights

Kinston police are checking every possible lead in their effort to stem a wave of break-ins that began Monday night with the tearing open of a large safe in the Atlantic and East Carolina freight station on East Blount Street.

Tuesday night what are believed to be the same thieves broke in the Railway Express Agency office and carted away a small safe, tried to tear open the safe at Ward and Fields Sinclair distributors, and got away with 50 cents — in cash — from the office of the North Carolina Products Company.

All four of the break-ins have taken place along the right of way of the railroad.

From the freight station safe the thieves got about $95 and another $30 from the express agency office, plus two pistols and a quantity of travelers checks.

Nothing was missing from the office of the Ward and Fields, but considerable damage was done to the safe.
