"Watch for them, think for them, protect them!" Motor Vehicles Commissioner Edward Scheidt made that appeal this week now that schools have re-opened with over a million youngsters back in classes. Children are often heedless," Scheidt pointed out. "You can't expect them to be constantly on the alert for traffic . . . and you can't penalize them even when they are in the wrong."

Disclosing that 112 child pedestrians under 15 were killed last year, the vehicles chief said complete mobilization of all safety forces is the only thing that will assure children's safety on the streets.

"This means action by parents, teachers, motorists, older children and the youngsters themselves," he declared.

According to traffic experts, a large percentage of child pedestrian deaths and injuries are avoidable. He believes the key to the situation lies in traffic safety education of the young and constant vigilance on the part of all adults.

"Naturally," he said, "a child's best safeguard in traffic is his own recognition of danger and his thorough knowledge of safety rules. But children are not naturally cautious, they must be taught caution both at home and at school."

Scheidt outlined these simple rules for parents to follow in educating their children in traffic safety:

1. Teach your children habits of safe walking.
2. See that they always play in safe places away from the street.
3. Set them an example of safe behavior by your own conduct in traffic.

He also reminded teachers and school officials:

1. Make traffic safety a regular part of your instruction.
2. Cooperate with parents and traffic officers.

And, of course," Scheidt said, "the responsibility of the motorist for child pedestrian safety is obvious. No matter how well a child has been trained, there are times when he forgets. At such times only quick thinking by the driver can avoid disaster. Constant alertness is a must!"

He warned motorists to be on the look-out at all times and to slow down when driving in residential areas or near schools, playgrounds or vacant lots. He especially cautioned drivers to keep a sharp eye out for moving children — children running, on roller skates, in wagons or on tricycles and scooters.

"Children trust you," Scheidt asserted. "Don't strike them down."
