

Grocery Advertisements Give Helpful Information

Are you a food ad-watcher? Food ads save time, give information, announce foods on the market and can lead to a sizable savings in your food budget.

Miss Gaynelle Hogan, consumer marketing specialist in Greensboro, says food ads often tell what foods are in season or in plentiful supply. When many stores have "specials" on the same items, it usually means that it is a good time to serve that food.

What is a special bargain? Miss Hogan says many people think a "special" is always a bargain but it is not true. To determine the value of a special, you need to know the usual price, the quality, the brand name and then interpret all of these in terms of the use to which the purchase will be put. For example, poor quality apples at a price of 10 cents per pound could result in a cost of 20 cents per pound if half the apples are discarded as unusable.

Studies show that a family can save 10 to 15 per cent on their food bill by paying attention to specials and food prices. A homemaker should learn to shop with an eye open for specials.

She says you should avoid excessive impulse buying but be ready to snap up a bargain when you see it. Be alert to changes in price and be ready to buy or hold back based on your shopping know-how.

Miss Hogan says you should buy in large amounts only if you are sure they will be used. Be sure that the special price on smaller sizes means savings over the price of the large size.

"Always remember to take time to compare before you go shopping and while you shop," she adds.
