the five causes he mentions relate to the economic ills confronting our own Nation. These were: extravagant governmental spending, and a failure to realize that the foremost enemy lay within the gates of the empire and in fact in the people themselves.

Our nation may have come to one of the great crossroads in its history. It is this. Having built a nuclear deterrent against war, can we now build an economic deterrent capable of avoiding a Western collapse?

The road to fiscal responsibility involves courage, hard decisions, and a weighing of far-reaching consequences for all Americans.

If we choose to adhere to common sense in our analysis of all theories currently being advanced on this problem, freedom and private enterprise will be safer in the decade ahead.
