

Garden Time

By M. E. Gardner

The suggestions I am making in this column apply to the lower Piedmont and eastern Carolina. For the upper Piedmont and mountains, delay planting and other suggested operations from one to two weeks depending upon elevation.

Prune the early flowering shrubs, if they need attention, as soon as they have finished blooming; i. e., spirea and golden bell.

Hardy chrysanthemums provide much color and satisfaction as any plants I know for enjoyment around the home. It is now time to divide the clumps.

If you have a green thumb, and the necessary equipment to do a good job of rooting, you may wish to make root cuttings for later planting.

Plant gladiolus corms every two weeks until July (June in the mountains), for continuous blooming during the summer. Tuberoses and Rubrum lilies may also be planted now.

I hope that you have already planted your cool season vegetables. For warm season crops such as snap and lima beans and sweet corn, wait until the soil temperature rises to about 70 degrees. The warm season crops will not tolerate cold wet soils and, if planted in such, the germination will be poor or the seed may rot in the ground.

Fertilize daffodils, crocus and other early flowering bulbs. This is important to store reserve food in the bulbs for flowering in 1964. Be careful when mowing so you will not cut the leaves from the plants because they are essential for food manufacture.

If you are planning to lift and divide any of your early bulbs, be sure to wait until the leaves have turned brown. It is desirable to lift and divide daffodils and others at least once in every three years.

Bacterial wilt has always been a problem in tomato production. Remember that we now have no control for this soil borne disease. However, we do have a good selection of varieties which are resistant to fusarium wilt — Homestead, Rutgers, Marglobe, Manalucie and Marion.

Fertilize azaleas, camellias, shrubs and shade trees if you don't already have this job behind you.

Keep the roses protected against black spot, aphids and red spiders at all times. All-purpose sprays, or dusts, are satisfactory because they contain insecticidal and fungicidal properties in their formulations.

Keep after the weeds in the lawn. Use 2-4, D amine form (never ester), and prevent spray drift to ornamental and other plants which may be injured or killed.
