OUR CREED

We Believe
that business should earn a profit, and that it should wear its profits proudly. Too long has business permitted short-sighted critics to point the finger of shame at profits, as something to be schemed, bargained and taxed out of existence.

We Believe that business should be more eloquent and evangelistic in explaining and defending the profit system, otherwise known as free enterprise. We should convince all people that out of profits must come the money to make jobs, to promote philanthropy, to support the government, and to finance the growth of the country. We have erected what we fondly hope are adequate defenses for the physical targets of the Communists, but we have failed to provide for the defense of their ultimate targets, our profit system, our democracy and our faith in God.

We Believe that a business should be deeply integrated into the community it serves, so that it will know the needs, desires, and problems of that community.

We Believe that a business should accept its full share of responsibility for the things that make a community a better place in which to work and live. Concretely, this seems that a business should interest itself in schools, churches, hospitals, parks, museums, settlement houses, health and welfare organizations, old peoples' homes, and nurseries, among other institutions.

We Believe that a business should be a good citizen in the formal or political sense of the word. It should of course pay its just share of taxes fully and promptly. Over and above that, it should take an interest in government and encourage its employees, customers and associates to do so. Business should support city planning and soundly conceived public works, looking upon them, not as a burden, but as an investment.

We Believe that business should sweep broad horizons in its thinking, that business should be accurately informed about and emotionally involved in the problems that confront the United States, both in so-called normal times, such as you and I have seldom experienced in our lives, and also in these days of cold war and hot peace. We believe business should contribute to the nation its full share of thinking and leadership. We think business should speak out more frequently, more clearly, more bravely.

We Believe that a business should contribute to the economic health of its community. It should work vigorously for a political climate in which business can prosper, thereby broadening the base of taxation, creating jobs and developing opportunity for the young. Business should lay out the welcome mat for other businesses, even though of the same type.
