

FANCY DESSERT: FRESH NECTARINE PIE

Want to impress guests? It's no trick at all with "Nectarine Custard Pie."

Golden fresh nectarine slices, glistening with a lemon glaze, swirl over a fluffy custard layer in a graham cracker crust for this cool-as-a-fan dessert.

The nectarines are peeled in this instance. But for most recipes and for out-of-hand eating, don't bother to remove the fetching red-and-gold skins. They are fuzzless, thin and ever so palatable.

California orchards provide fine fruit fanciers with fresh nectarines all summer long. Whether you enjoy them as-is for snacks or in desserts, salads or meat sauces, you have in your grasp one of nature's most delicious products.

Nectarine Custard Pie

- 1 package (3 or 3 1/2 oz.) vanilla pudding and pie filling
- 1 1/2 cups milk
- 2 teaspoons cornstarch
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 1/4 cup water
- Dash salt
- 1/2 tablespoon lemon juice
- 3 large fresh nectarines
- 1/2 cup whipping cream
- Baked 9-inch graham cracker crust, cooled

Prepare pie filling as package directs, but use only 1 1/2 cups milk; cool. Meanwhile, blend cornstarch, sugar, water and salt in saucepan; cook, stirring, over medium heat until mixture comes to boil and is thickened. Stir in lemon juice; cool. Blanch nectarines about 30 seconds; peel and slice. Whip cream until stiff; fold into pie filling and turn into crust. Arrange nectarine slices on top, then spoon lemon glaze over. Chill 1 hour before serving. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Two local distress calls were received this week — one about tomatoes and the other about apples.

When the person calling about tomatoes described the symptoms, I was pretty sure that the trouble was caused by fusarium wilt — a fungus disease.

I did ask some questions, though, to confirm my suspicion. Are they growing in full sun? Yes. What is the soil type? Clayey. Have you given the plants reasonable good care? Yes. What variety did you plant? When he answered "Big Boy," I was sure of the diagnosis because this variety is not resistant to fusarium wilt.

Fusarium wilt stunts the plant growth; leaves turn yellow, wilt wither and drop off, starting at the base of the plant. Brown streaks occur inside the lower stem and roots, and a brown canker may girdle the stem near the soil line.

The most practical method for control of this disease by the home gardener is the planting of fusarium wilt resistant varieties. There are many good ones — Marion, Manalucie, Homestead strains and others.

A more serious disease, bacterial wilt, also attacks tomatoes, but we have no varieties resistant to this trouble, which is soil borne. The symptoms are also different from fusarium.

Plants are stunted and wilt rapidly, usually beginning in the top portion of the plant. The plants die, usually without yellowing or spotting of the leaves. The inside of the stem shows a brownish discoloration and is water soaked near the ground line.

The apple trouble was caused by cedar rust. This is an alternative host fungus disease which spends the summer stage on the apple leaves and the winter stage as hard brown balls on the red cedar.

On the upper surface of the leaf the disease appears as yellow-orange to orange-red spots with black specks. On the under side of the leaf the spots appear as creamy white to light orange, short fuzzy tendrils. Leaves that are heavily spotted will drop prematurely, which stops fruit sizing and growth processes, generally.

The most practical control for the home fruit garden is to remove the cedar trees, thus destroying one of the host plants. The other method is to pick off and destroy all cedar balls as soon as they form on the cedar trees.

My dear Sir:

I am wondering if you would please be so kind as to publish my letter in your local Lenoir County newspaper. Your kindness and courtesy will be most deeply appreciated.

The undersigned is trying to locate some person who has a knowledge of the local history of your area. In the late 1700s there lived a minister (I think - Baptist) by the name of the Rev. GEORGE GRAHAM. He preached at an old church known as the "BEAR CREEK CHURCH" near LaGrange and also around in a circuit in that area.

I would like very much to contact any person having any knowledge of this old preacher or his descendants.

Thank you for your courtesy and cooperation.

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Barbara D.
