October's Brush Painting With Nature's Brightest Colors

October's broad, yet delicate brush is now busy painting the northern hemisphere with nature's brightest colors. Shading the brilliant greens in a million tones of yellow, red and brown, and even the sadder tones of gray. The fields so shortly ago that were ripening in dark greens are now falling asleep in the sombre shades of winter just ahead. From the waving sea oats along the coastal dunes to the brilliant maples in the distant hills all of North Carolina is at its most colorful stage. Wherever one goes this glorious exhibition of nature's incomparable artistry can be seen. Slow down as you pass through October and let yourself enjoy the most beautiful of all seasons.

State Treasurer Edwin Gill is scheduled to make the dedication address.

The park lies between the Goldsboro Highway and Neuse

River just west of the Frosty Morn Packing Company, and the park site includes with the museum the grave of Governor Caswell, and the remains of the Confederate Gunboat Neuse, which was moved from Neuse River, where it had been sunken for 98 years.

Seven Jones Central Football Players Escape Injury in Shower of Bullets

Late Tuesday afternoon seven members of the Jones Central High School football squad escaped without injury when a hail of .22 caliber bullets spattered the station wagon in which they were riding.

Sheriff Brown Yates said the boys were going home from football practice in a station wagon owned by Willie Earl White of Dover route 2, and being driven by White's son, Bobby.

On "Beasley Road" in the northern tip of the county the car passed the home of Hoyal Miller and there the hail of bullets punctured the wagon five times and numerous other bullets missed the car.

Melwood Miller, 14 year-old son of Hoyal, has been charged with the shooting and is indicted for assault with a deadly weapon.

Yates said three of the bullets hit the front left door of the wagon, one hit the left rear door and the final bullet hit the tail gate door. None penetrated completely inside the wagon, but two of those in the front came perilously close to going all the way through.

Yates said the Miller boy, who is also a student at Jones Central High School, admitted doing the shooting, and said he didn't know how many shots he fired from the automatic rifle he was using. He said the boys in the station wagon were hollering at him and messing with the mail box. All the boys in the wagon denied hollering at Miller or tampering with the mail box.

Last winter a stick of dynamite exploded in the front yard of the Miller home, destroying the mail box and breaking several panes in a front window.

The Miller children were among the first colored children to integrate the white schools of Jones County, and several are still attending white schools.

Jones County's Cox Boys Getting Early Start in Livestock

Education, competitive events, commercial booths, exhibits and midway attractions all represent YOUTH at the State Fair. Students throughout the State gather in Raleigh to compete and have fun for one week, each representing a vital part of the future development of our State.

Throughout the week, youth will be showing livestock, some will even compete with adults. Johnnie Cox, and his brother, James, of Jones County, have big hopes in the Swine competition. Johnnie will be showing twelve Market Barrows and five Breeding Poland Chinas, as a part of his 4-H project.

Johnnie, now eleven years old, was the Sweepstakes Winner in the Virginia State Fair with his Market Barrow. He will be showing his Maryland Champion Barrow in the Junior show this week.

James, nine years old, showing the first time this year, is hoping he can accomplish as much in the next two years as his brother Johnnie.

These boys live in a trailer during fair week located on the fairgrounds with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Cox. Even though the boys are busy caring for their stock, they find plenty of time to enjoy the many sights at the fair.
