Personal Data On Local Population May Go On Federal Computers

Much more is known about the personal affairs of each and every resident of Lenoir County than they would imagine.

In the official records of Federal, state and local bureaus and in the private files of other organizations is a mass of data covering the social and economic lives of each local person.

Where he was born, how much education he has had, his marital setup, his earning capacity, where he lived previously, whether he owns his home or rents, whether or not his wife works, if he owns a washing machine, his police record, if he has one, how much he pays in taxes — these and many other facts about him are all in the records.

What brings this matter to the fore at this time is a plan, now under consideration in Washington, for an electronic data center that would bring together and put into computers the wealth of information that is now spread among many governmental agencies in Washington and elsewhere.

One such agency is the Social Security Administration. Its files contain information on the earning and employment records of some 29,600 local people who are now holding down jobs, or are self-employed or are retired.

Another source is the FBI, which has the fingerprints of approximately 25,000 residents of Lenoir County on tap.

Included are the fingerprints of government employees, of men and women who have served in the armed forces, of people who have been charged with felonies and of many others.

Much information concerning local individuals has also emerged from the surveys made by the Census Bureau. The 546 people in the area who have been divorced and the 250 who are foreign-born are thus pin-pointed.

This data would be fed into the computers, together with the mass of other facts about the local population.

Opposition has been voiced by Congressmen and others, however. They fear the collection and improper use of dossiers on each citizen.

Government spokesmen have assured them that the only purpose of the data would be to produce better national statistics and that there would be no unwarranted disclosure of information about individuals.

Lenoir County Schools Transferring 369 Negro Students Into White Schools And 25 Teachers to Please Washington

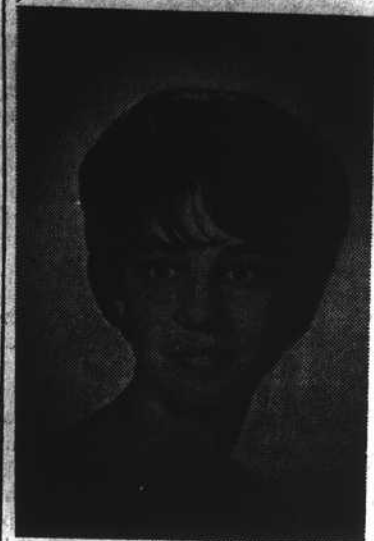

This week it was announced in Washington that federal flunkies had taken the Lenoir County School System off its "deferred list" after local officials had informed them that they were transferring 369 Negro children into white schools and also switching 25 teachers across the color line in the county system.

There is a possibility that this 25 teacher list may grow since the county school system this week is still 35 teachers short.

transferred will be distributed as follows:

To La Grange 116, to Contentnea 111, to Southwood 47, to Pink Hill 43 and to Moss Hill 42.

The teacher transfer will put two Negro teachers in each of the county's seven white schools and from eight to 11 white teachers will be in the county's four Negro schools; with three or four at Frink, two or three at Savannah, two at Woodington and one or two at Banks Elementary School.

At the close of the county schools this spring it was announced that 527 Negro students would be assigned to white schools this fall, but since then pressures from parents of some of these children and pressures from some schools involved resulted in 168 of those 527 being reassigned to the Negro school of their choice.
