

ON MISLEADING SCHOOL CHILDREN

JOHN J. SYNON

Anyone with a heart and an understanding of the facts surrounding "race" can do no less than feel great compassion for the scurrilous treatment our young people are receiving at the hands of race agitators.

I write of those vicious people who tell school children there are no material differences between races and that whatever "apparent" differences there are were created through the unwarranted prejudice of those, the parents, who acknowledge the differences to be real and significant.

Consider this incident:

The student council of Senn High School, Washington, D.C., recently gave over a day to demonstrating that a belief in race differences is ridiculous. To that end the students scrawled labels — Superior and Inferior — on drinking fountains and washrooms. The "superior" race, according to the rules of this macabre game, consisted of those who wore glasses. Such "superiors" were allowed to use only those facilities so labeled; the "inferiors" were allowed to use only those facilities labeled "inferior".

The program, the student council explained, was intended to provide "a greater number of students with a more practical and personal knowledge of the ridiculousness of discrimination."

Did it?

Our academic hierarchy, the most of it, has fled the truth. They have become purveyors of propaganda, a particularly vicious sort of propaganda.

Such is the legacy of the Liberal Establishment.
