

Huge Quantity Stumphole Whisky is Destroyed Near LaGrange; Still is Discovered in Falling Creek Area

Monday night federal officers raided a tenant farm just east of LaGrange, and only a few hundred yards off of heavily traveled Highway 70 and poured out 2622 gallons of stumphole whisky they found in one gallon plastic jugs.

Hosea Williams, tenant on the farm owned by Willie Measley, was indicted for possessing this $13,000 supply of illicit elixir, which the feds say is the biggest haul they have made in 18 years at one time.

Tuesday afternoon Lenoir County ABC Officers Clarence Bland and Paul Young and State ABC Officer Tommy Taylor found the still from which it is believed this supply of stumphole poured.

This still was in Falling Creek Township, about three or four miles from the place the finished product was found. Ownership of the land near Pine Bush Landing is uncertain since it is a wooded area, with access from several different roads.

The still had a mash capacity of 8800 gallons, which could be run off every four days, giving the still a capacity of 880 gallons every four days.

British Taking Over American TV?

By Jan Rider

The British for some reason are becoming more numerous on American television. Anyone viewing the present television schedule will surely agree more and more British actors are seen each day.

Some shows, like the Avengers, have British stars and also take place in England, while other programs have only a guest British actor or maybe a portion of their program is filmed in England. In shows with limited budgets, like afternoon soap operas, the stars who suddenly leave the program usually go to England for a business trip. The character then returns in a few weeks being portrayed by a new actor.

The southerner is happy to greet the British into the American television scene. Until recently southerners, almost without exception, served as the villain, whether the program was of the western or spy type, afternoon soap opera, or even the Saturday morning cartoons. The British actors are at least unable to fake a sweet southern accent.

The American advertiser is among those that the British bug has bit. A tall middle age British fellow, wearing a black derby and carrying an umbrella, has replaced Katy Winters in the Secret commercials. He barges into an unsuspecting home and collects Katy's new improved deodorant, replacing it with a new, even better, spray on.

Of course one can not omit the buck tooth, sandy haired limey who sits on the stern of his yacht and explains the anatomy of his extra long, extra mild, one hundred millimeter Pall Mall Gold cigarette.

The American television networks must think the American public would rather watch British actors than American, and the advertising agencies of our nation must also believe that the British can sell an American product, to an American, better than an American can sell the same item.
