

"GRAVY-UP" THE FRIENDLY FRUIT

"Welcome Stranger", beckons that succulent fruit the pineapple... at least that's the way the legend goes. Folks in the West Indies started the whole thing off by placing pineapple or pineapple tops over hut entrances to welcome strangers. Spaniards liked the idea, took it to Spain, and from there it was picked up by the English. Colonists brought the friendly-fruit-sign back to this side of the ocean by carving pineapples over doorways and into gateposts.

A good tradition's worth saving... welcome in spring with a delicious dinner party starring Chicken-Pineapple Batons. The roll-ups take a bit of doing but the savory mushroom gravy is just a can-opener away. Perfectly seasoned and thickened canned gravy is truly a hostess helper. Try it... not only for company fare but for family fare too. It's a great timesaver.

Round out your festive affair with hot buttered rice with plump raisins, spinach salad tossed with sesame seed dressing, and hard rolls. Baked Alaska could be your grand finale. However, if you're feeling less bold, cool pudding or refreshing sherbet will be just as pleasing.

CHICKEN-PINEAPPLE BATONS

- 3 whole chicken breasts (about 2 1/2 pounds), split, skinned, and boned
- 1 can (16 to 20 ounces) pineapple spears, drained
- 2 tablespoons seasoned flour
- 1/2 cup chopped onion
- 1/4 teaspoon allspice
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 1 can (10 1/2 ounces) mushroom gravy
- 2 tablespoons brandy
- Toasted slivered almonds

Flatten chicken with meat hammer or edge of heavy saucer. Place pineapple spears in center of each chicken piece; roll up and fasten with toothpick or skewers. Dust with flour, in skillet, brown chicken and cook onion with allspice in butter until tender. Add gravy. Cover; cook over low heat 30 minutes or until tender. Stir now and then. Add brandy; heat. Garnish with almonds. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

GARDEN TIME

By M. E. GARDNER, N. C. State University

"What is meant by chlorosis and how can this condition be treated when occurring on azalea plants?"

When azalea leaves lose their normal green color and become yellowish they are spoken of as being chlorotic. Sometimes the yellowing follows a rather definite pattern with the midrib and veins remaining green and other parts of the surface turning yellow.

This lack of normal leaf color develops as a result of a trace element deficiency and is not associated with a disease organism. These trace element deficiencies are becoming rather widespread in many crops and bring into focus the importance of proper nutrition.

The most common form of chlorosis on azaleas is caused by the lack of available iron brought about by a soil reaction, pH, which is too high or sweet. The iron deficiency symptom is further aggravated in soils which are wet and poorly aerated.

For correction, the first and most obvious step is to adjust the soil reaction, or pH, by using either aluminum sulphate or sulfur, to a pH of about 5.0. A soil test will be necessary in order to make this adjustment intelligently.

Another method correcting the chlorotic condition is the use of iron chelate (Key-late). Chelates are made from organic compounds and are considered to be stable and water soluble. They are effective sources of trace element correction in plant nutrition. Mix the iron chelate with water according to instructions on the container. The solution can be sprayed on the plant or sprinkled over the plants with a watering can.

While iron chlorosis is the most common deficiency symptom on azaleas in most soils, chlorosis may also appear on plants grown in clay soils due to a deficiency of magnesium. This condition can be corrected by spraying, or sprinkling with one ounce of magnesium sulphate (Epsom salts) in 2 gallons of water.

In answering this question I do not wish to cause confusion because nematodes attacking the root system may also cause a condition resembling iron deficiency chlorosis. In one case the nematode interferes with the absorption of all nutrients while in the other case the soil reaction makes the iron unavailable to the plant.

Use "Labor-Free" Garments Says Clothing Specialist

To make your spring and summer days as free from clothing care as possible, shop for garments that can practically take care of themselves, advises Dorothy Barrier, extension clothing specialist, North Carolina State University.

And it's possible to have clothes that are almost "labor-free" if you watch for certain features as you shop.

For example, many permanent press jeans and play clothes can be machine washed, tumbled dried and never need to be pressed. Also, many permanent press garments now feature a soil release finish. Watch for it. It makes oily spots and stains easier to remove.

Then to keep summer patching at a minimum, look for reinforced play and work clothes. Knees of jeans come with an extra layer of fabric fused right inside the leg. And many work garments have extra stitching, especially at the areas where there is the most strain.

Summer wash days seem to come more often because of the extra outdoor activities. So, summer colors should be able to stand extra launderings.

Look for vat dyed items, if you want the color to last. Or some labels will indicate that the color is at least safe to wash with other clothes. If it isn't labeled for color fastness, you may find yourself with many time consuming hand-washing jobs.

Watch the label for shrinkage control, too; Miss Barrier says. If the garment is labeled "sanforized" it won't shrink more than one per cent. If the claim is for not more than three per cent, you may find that garment a struggle to get to after the first washing.

It adds up to this: As you shop for warm weather wear, you'll do well to select clothes that are able to "take it," and still look good with the least amount of care, Miss Barrier concludes.

It is not possible to look at your watch now without making a mental translation between Daylight Savings Time and Central Time. This page had meant to let Daylight Saving Time come in this year without making any surly comments. But since somebody raised the question, yes, Daylight Saving Time is communist-inspired. By rendering Americans groggy from getting up an hour earlier, the communists hope for an easy takeover. If they invade, it will be some morning at 7 o'clock, daylight saving time.

Safecracker Aborts

An amateur safecracker's mission Monday night aborted when the welding equipment he had stolen ran out of fuel. The welding gear had been stolen from Guy Warren's shop on West Bright Street and carted to the office of Mitchell Wooten Courts, a branch of the Kinston Housing Authority. There apparently the welding rig ran out of gas about time the cracksman went work on the safe. Some damage to safe resulted but nothing was lost.

? — Do the dark outer leaves of lettuce have more food value than the inside leaves? It's the dark leaves that are rich in iron, calcium and Vitamin A in lettuce, cabbage, etc. Trim these leafy vegetables sparingly to retain maximum food value.

? — Why are muslin sheets usually cheaper than percale sheets? Muslin sheets are less expensive in cost because the thread count is lower.

? — What do you mean by the thread count in sheets? Look for a high thread count (the sum of the number of crosswise and lengthwise threads in a square inch of fabric). A high count of 180 threads per square inch or more will give greater strength than a lower count, such as 140.

? — When is the size of a sheet determined? The size will be the size before hemming. Top hems are usually three inches

SENATOR SAM

at a university convocation and defined the perimeters of student conduct which the State University at Greenville will tolerate. He said with refreshing forthrightness:

"This campus will not become a rest haven for the indolent, a correctional institution for the undisciplined, a remedial institution for the untrained, and most emphatically it will not become a sanctuary for the lawless... The few individuals on this campus who have intimated that buildings might be burned should hear this and hear it clearly. Force will be met with force, and lawlessness shall be prosecuted to the full extent of the law."

Dr. Jenkins went on to point out something that may have been lost sight of in the rash of headlines that have told of campus disorders. He stated that every student at East Carolina received a taxpayer's scholarship of at least $801 and that of the 67 students who were immediately petitioning the University with a wide range of "demands", 45 received additional financial aid ranging from $300 to $1,846 per year.

Dr. Jenkins did not close the door to change, but he warned the students that they will be held responsible for their actions. I wish to applaud his sensible action. There is much need today for frankness as well as fairness about the responsibilities which individuals bear in our society. As Dr. Jenkins says, our institutions are not perfect, but remedies should be considered "only through regular and orderly channels."

The crucial question is whether we are willing to permit every means to destroy our educational system which offers the best hope of civilization's survival in a perilous world. In contrast to the tragedy at Cornell, Dr. Jenkins offers a sensible alternative for our administrators to follow.
