

GARDEN TIME

By M. E. GARDNER, N. C. State University

All readers of "Garden Time" please note my correct address is Dept. of Horticultural Science, N. C. State University, Box 3216, Raleigh, N. C. 27607. If you will remember this, it will expedite compliance with your requests for information.

I make this request because I received a letter today with three forwarding addresses: The original; a forwarding address from another city; on-campus forwarding address; and a P. O. request "Please provide correct address." Thank You!

From time to time, I receive some rather unusual requests. This one was received this week from a reader in Chapel Hill: "I should also be most appreciative of any information about availability and suitability for local conditions of vines of Cabernet Sauvignon or Pinot Noir."

The only word I could recognize from my two years of high school and two years of college French was "Noir" and this did not help much. However, since the reader had requested bulletins on both muscadine and bunch grapes, I assumed that the "vines" referred to must be varieties of Old World or California-type grapes.

I remembered that I had a book in my files on "American Wines" and in it, I found the answers. Pinot Noir makes the finest red wine available and goes to prove, I think, that Chapel Hillians enjoy the finer things in life even when it comes to imbibing; in moderation, of course.

A rosarian friend asked me to suggest a procedure to follow when germinating rose seed. Knowing that many of my readers like to experiment, we are sharing with you.

First, allow the seed to mature on the plant. Remove the seed from the hip (pod) and mix with moist peat moss. Then place in small glass jars with perforated tops, or cover with something like cheese-cloth in order to admit air. Place the jars in your refrigerator for from one to three months to break the rest period.

After storage for about a month examine the seed at about three-week intervals to see whether or not any are beginning to germinate. If so, plant them in small pots using 2 parts of peat moss, one part coarse sand and one part of good garden soil.

At the end of three months, plant any ungerminated seed in the soil mix, above, and cover lightly. Place in a cold frame and observe from time to time, as some seed germinate very slowly. Keep moist but not wet.

Prepare That Bird With Care, He Might Bite Back!

Homemakers preparing turkey for the holidays will wish to be assured of two things: that the turkey is good to eat and that it is safe to eat.

How delicious the turkey is depends on the homemaker's recipe and cooking skill. How safe the bird is to eat depends on the method of preparation she uses.

According to Mrs. Marjorie Donnelly, extension food specialist, North Carolina State University, "the inside of poultry carcasses often is contaminated with salmonella: one of the chief causes of food poisoning." These bacteria multiply rapidly at temperatures between 50 and 150 degrees.

Cooking turkeys overnight at very low temperatures such as 200 to 225 degrees also leaves plenty of chance for salmonella growth, Mrs. Donnelly points out.

So does a rather new method of preparation that calls for wrapping the bird in foil, putting it in an oven set at a high temperature, then turning off the oven while the bird roasts overnight.

The safest way to prepare holiday turkey is to use an oven temperature of 325 degrees and plan the roasting time so the turkey will be done about 20 to 30 minutes before serving, Mrs. Donnelly says.

The safest way to prepare dressing is to cook it separately. However, if the homemaker wishes to stuff the bird, she should do so just before cooking. And she should use a meat thermometer to be sure the interior of the dressing reaches 165 degrees.

Some homemakers will point out that they have heard that one of the preparation techniques is not recommended and have

Forty-two North Carolina 4-H members will depart on November 25 for trips to Chicago and the 40th National 4-H Congress.

The Tar Heel delegation will be joined at the Conrad Hilton Hotel by some 1,000 4-H members from the 50 states, Canada and Puerto Rico. Each delegate is a state winner in a 4-H project or activity.

Dr. T. C. Blalock, state 4-H leader at N. C. State University, says the Tar Heel 4-H'ers have won the trips on their records and achievements. In Chicago they will be competing for $600 educational scholarships and numerous other awards.

The theme of the annual event is "Make Tomorrow Happen." Prominent leaders from government, education and business will meet with the delegates to provoke a greater challenge in setting high standards for the future.

Blalock points out that the formal program doesn't begin until Sunday, November 30, but there will be get-acquainted parties and registration the first two days.

During the action-packed week, which ends with a final banquet and farewell party on Thursday night, more than 300 youths will be selected for superior achievement and leadership ability.

The donors for the trips and scholarships are some 60 business firms, foundations, associations and individuals who contribute more than a million dollars each year. The event is planned by the National 4-H
