hope to reverse the self-defeating and inequitable burden of political welfare programs, then they must take a look at their own stewardship in personal humanitarianism and compassion. This has become a lost concept in our time. Charity, which once began at home and in the heart, has been taken over by government, and has been transformed into a cold, calculating political mechanism that cares less for humanity than for votes in the next election.

It was paradoxical, in a way, that this subject was being discussed in the Congress at the beginning of Christmas week. The One whose birthday was to be observed a few days later was not mentioned once during the debate. Nor was any of the admonitions which Christ voiced about how man was to fulfill his personal responsibilities.

Nowhere, at no time, did Christ mention a government welfare program, let alone endorse one. He suggested another way, one that would work. But neither the politicians nor the people have paid much attention. They have preferred instead to try to do it their way. They will fail. As long as the real meaning of Christmas is obscured by the artificiality of man-made political substitutes, we will continue to wonder in the swamps of failure.

It is something to bear in mind as we move into another New Year.

TREE DAMAGE

ing Hazel (1954) Hurricane) that are still growing."

He added that, if the tree is large and severely damaged, the services of a reputable tree surgeon may be required.

He suggested that, if the tree is small — 15 to 20 feet high or three or four inches in diameter — perhaps "it should be left alone."

Another suggestion: "Cut broken limbs of hardwoods back to the nearest larger limb or trunk and treat with a tree paint or wound compound. Don't cut off ends of limbs. Cut them flush with the larger limb or trunk."

Whitfield also warned of the danger of falling broken limbs. "They should be removed," he said.

And one blanket suggestion: All damaged trees will recover more rapidly if they are fertilized. Whitfield suggested using a high nitrogen fertilizer — a 16-8-8 analysis or equivalent — at the rate of two pounds per inch of diameter. A 10-inch tree would receive 20 pounds of 16-8-8, for example.

the magistrates each and all operate under the direct orders of the superior court, and were using search warrant forms provided by courts and were further using instruction sheets on the preparation of search warrant in compliance with the law as it is now on the books, as quoted earlier in this article.

It further overlooks the fact that each lawyer is a sworn officer of the court, and as such, has not only the duty but the responsibility to help other officers of the court, when and if he feels any court official needs help. Magistrates are fellow officers of the court, and if from the depth of their wisdom and the breadth of their education any lawyer sees that mistakes have been made, or are about to be made that will impede the implementation of justice he is sworn to intervene and to help, and if such help is refused they have the right and duty to take their case to the resident superior court judge, who has total control over the magistrates in the counties of his residency.

What is more identical warrants to those refused by Judge Copeland and Cahoon have been used against other witnesses with the approval of these judges, and at the same terms of court when other identical warrants were being denied.
