ELDER STATESMAN SPEAKS

New York City — For 32 years, Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University has been a delegate to Republican National Conventions. This year he sailed for Europe on the return trip of the Queen Mary. Asked about the candidates, he summarized: Lowden "has all the qualifications;" Can they win with Landon? brought an emphatic "NO!" How about Hoover?—"Don't make me laugh."

FARMS NEED MORE FEED AND CATTLE

Some Crops Need To Be Cut, But Many Need Increase.

North Carolina farmers who have studied agricultural conditions in the State believe they should produce more poultry, livestock, and feed, but less cotton, tobacco, and other cash crops.

Such a shift in production is needed to balance farming to meet local requirements and at the same time provide adjustments necessary from a national standpoint, the farmers decided.

Farmers who made the study were committeemen appointed in almost every county of the State in connection with the county program planning movement started last December by the State College agricultural extension service.

The 6,919 committeemen and assistants surveyed local conditions, discussed the situation with more than 50,000 other farmers, and made recommendations regarding improvements needed in this State.

A tabulation of all their recommendations, as made by Julian Mann, who is in charge of extension studies at State College, brought out the following points, among other things:

The cotton crop should be cut 35 per cent below the average acreage for the 1928-1932 period. Allowing for better farming practices, production would be cut only 9 per cent.

The tobacco crop should be held to 79 per cent of the base acreage established under the old AAA, but production would be only 10 per cent below the base poundage, in view of better farming methods.

3,000,000 War Vets Receive Bonds; Repetition Of 1931 Splurge Unlikely

Exchange of Government Checks For Bonds to be Fairly Well Completed by End of Week, Postal Officials Think — Few Thousand Errors Reported.

With a few hitches, the government's bonus distributing machinery Monday dropped "baby" bonds into the waiting hands of about three million war veterans.

This done, the treasury and post-office departments made ready for the next step — to cash all bonds turned in for payment.

Secretary Morgenthau told reporters at his press conference there were "bound to be" some errors in the bonus shipments, with three shifts of emergency workers laboring at top speed, but added he did not believe the number was large.

The postoffice department was reported to have sent out a list of 15,000 bonds which were shipped by mistake. Postmasters were instructed not to certify those for payment.

In a few cases, it was said, shipments were stopped because the packets had been improperly addressed or because packets contained the wrong number of bonds. Some cases were reported, too, in which veterans, fearing that their original applications had been lost, had sent duplicates to the veterans administration.

To Speed Cash Payments

Postal officials said veterans probably would begin receiving government checks in exchange for their bonds on Wednesday and that these payments would be fairly well completed by the end of the week.

Although about $1,650,000,000 worth of bonds have been started to the veterans, officials said some probably would hold their bonds for a time, to draw interest at 3 per cent a year.

The checks will be sent out in a separate mailing from 248 paying postoffices to those veterans who return their bonds to their local postoffices and have them certified by workers.

Most veterans received small checks, each for less than $50, in their packets today. With his allotment of bonds—each worth $50—the veteran was sent a check to make up the difference between the highest $50 unit and the total due him on his adjusted service certificate.

Veterans in some cities worried today over reports that bonus packets had been ordered held up and returned to treasury offices. The veterans administration here said these orders did not stop shipments to veterans entitled to the bonus.

Most of the "stop" orders were issued in cases where veterans had been reported dead since their application, had been declared incompetent, or where other irregularities had cropped up.

Probate judges in some cities have sent to postmasters lists of veterans declared incompetent, with instructions that bonus packets should not be delivered to them.
