RAT STOPS NINETEEN ELECTRIC CLOCKS

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 10—A large rat blew out a 4,000-volt electric line in Cumberland's new, million-dollar high school on Johnson Heights yesterday. Needless to say, the rat died of the shock.

The time of the blowout was fixed at 10:27 by workmen due to the fact that each of the 19 clocks in the corridors were stopped at that time.

Workmen believed that only one or more fuses had been blown, but when they attempted to place fuses in the fuse box, they said, a four-foot long streak of light cracked as the first was placed in the socket.
