Pre-Nuptial Parties Continue For Miss Stephens

Complimenting Miss Rachel Stephens, popular bride-elect of early September, Mrs. Norman Ross entertained last night at Ross entertained Friday night at an attractive bridge party at the Ross residence on Dacian avenue in Durham. Guests also showered Miss Stephens with pieces of linen.

Blue and white tallies indicated the places of the players. Summer blossoms decorated the living room, where the three tables were set up for contract.

After several progressions, scores were added and prizes awarded high scorer and second high.

Then the hostess served her guests a delicious refreshment course consisting of frozen salad, cheese sticks, nut bread sandwiches, and fruit punch. Almonds and coffee were placed on the tables.

Friends invited for the party were: Miss Stephens, guest of honor; Misses Sarah Fisher, Bunny Thompson of Creedmoor, Margaret Gibbons, Mary Yarborough, Cornelia Yarborough, Janet Ormond, Maude McCracken, Marjorie Winston; Mesdames David Martin, Jamse Tullis, and William H. Kaufman, all of Durham.

sive implement, wielded with the proper authority, quickly and efficiently works miracles on the most unsightly yards and as I've said before the only expenditure necessary is that old proverbial elbow grease.

In closing let us all remember to use the facilities at hand, for in so doing the results will be most gratifying and the fruits of our labor can be easily seen. 'Tis said cleanliness is next to Godliness, and a thing of beauty is a joy forever, so let's bear in mind that cleanliness spells sanitation, sanitation means health and health means happiness, the right heritage of us all and again the biggest asset in gaining this goal is elbow grease, for this is the commodity that tends to make any home a better place at which to live.

Many casual observers, when thinking of home demonstration work in general, think only of the practical phase of it, but there is a very definite effort on the part of the members to develop the cultural aspects of the home. The emblem itself carries the health fire in the center to symbolize the center of the home; it expresses the spirit of the finest attributes of the home; such as fellowship, hospitality, comfort, peace and protection.

Mrs. E. P. Warren had this idea in mind when she prepared and gave as part of the devotional to one of her local club meetings.

"What I Want My Home To Be" Many centuries ago God established the home. At that time it was the chief institution of the world, and God willed that it should continue so. In these early days it was spoken of as "a place of refuge and rest, the abiding place of the affections"; and these are the qualities that I want to characterize my home.

A place of peace which can be brought about only by careful planning and unselfish cooperation by each member of the family. I want each member to know that it is her home and that she has a definite part in its program, and to willingly share her part of the responsibility.

I want each member of the family to know that his home is a place of refuge where he can get away from the rush of life and by reading, study, or whatever activity appeals to him express himself and develop the talents given him.

A place of rest, not only physical but moral and mental where we may get ourselves together and get new courage and strength for the complex problems that we have to face.

The abiding place of the affections where love rules. A place where the members love to be, where they love to bring their friends and where there is a spirit of contentment, sincerity and consistency.

"This is true nature of home, it is a place of peace, free from doubts and divisions; a sacred place, a vestal temple, where none may come but those who can be received with love." — John Ruskin.

John Harris Speaks On Home Improvement

By VELMA BEAM

Mr. John Harris, Extension Specialist from State College stressed particularly the necessity for underpinning houses, having an unbroken lawn except for shade trees, and the planting of cut-houses as well as the residences. These seem to be very simple rules to follow and of course it merely further proves that in "quiet simplicity elegance is obtained" whether it be home beautification, interior decorating or clothing!

Mr. Harris further urged the use of Italian rye and blue grass for year around lawns—these to be sown in September. "The lawn is a canvas on which the picture is painted," quoted Mr. Harris, "no matter how attractive the home or the shrubbery may be, it will never have the proper setting without the lawn."

"Too much emphasis cannot be placed on the preparation of the land for the lawn," continued Mr. Harris. "As the lawn is to be permanent, great care should be taken to have the land properly graded and thoroughly prepared before seeding. The seedbed should be fine, mellow and fairly well stocked with decomposed organic matter, but should not be loosened too deeply." Reasons for this were given and discussed.

Space does not permit going into further details on the subject of the lawn, but those who are interested may easily obtain the bulletin "Better Lawns in North Carolina" No. 189.

"When locating drives and walks it should be remembered that they are being constructed for use and not as an ornament

And so I say I want my home to be a family abode, a place of rest and at temple of worship.

for the grounds," said Mr. Harris, "Very often they detract from the beauty of the landscape by being improperly designed or appearing neglected in upkeep. In many instances a slightly curved walk or drive is very desirable, but they should never appear crooked or deviating too much from their
