

NORTH CAROLINA TRAINING SCHOOLS SHOULD BE USED

Ezell Reports Youthful Correctional Institutions Are Not Full, Can Be Used To Protect Minors.

Wider use by the counties of the facilities afforded by North Carolina's training schools would eliminate much of the necessity of keeping youthful delinquents in county jails, is the opinion of W. C. Ezell, director of the division of institutions and corrections of the State Board of Charities and Public Welfare.

"Sometimes children are detained in county jails where they come in contact with professional criminals because of the impression that the training school are filled, but the institutions for white delinquents have not been crowded for many months," Ezell stated.

Morrison Training School for Negro boys, he pointed out, has had a waiting list almost since it was founded, while there is no place for the care of delinquent Negro girls since the closing last March of the institution at Efland operated by the Federation of Negro Women's Clubs with a small subsidy from the state.

Stonewall Jackson Training school for white boys under 16 has a capacity of 500, yet its population generally runs in the neighborhood of 440 boys, while Eastern Carolina Training school taking white boys under 20 years, has increased its capacity through recent construction to 180, despite the fact that its population ordinarily runs into the neighborhood of 130.

The average population for Sacramand Manor for white girls under 16 is about 170 in spite of its normal facilities of taking care of 200 delinquent girls.

'Now, Here's the Way It Appears to Me'

It must have been a matter of grave consequence judging from the facial expression of Rep. Luther A. Johnson of Texas, right, who whispers into the ear of Rep. James A. Shanley of Connecticut. Johnson probably wears a happier look now, for the arms embargo repeal, which he backed, was adopted. Shanley advocated retention of existing embargo legislation.

In view of these facts, Ezell says, there is the possibility of taking at least 140 children that ordinarily spend from one day to two months in county jails all over the state out of their unwholesome incarcerations in buildings resembles medieval bastilles.

Another fact Ezell points out is that the North Carolina attorney general has ruled that it is illegal under the present law for a child under 16 years of age to be placed in a jail where he will come in contact with hardened criminals.

"North Carolina will never make any real progress toward crime prevention until these kindergardens of lawlessness are shoved overboard and children under 16 years of age given a decent chance to get the right attitude toward life.

"When the taxpayers of the counties come to realize that it will cost them less for law enforcement by preventing these youths from learning the ropes of jailed criminals, the state will have made a great forward step," Ezell said.

Junior Claims Man Sent To Prison On Forgery Count

Raleigh — Warren E. Allen, negro junior claims interviewer in the colored Wilmington office of the Employment Service Division of the Unemployment Compensation Commission, was sentenced to five to eight years, two to three years on the county roads and three to five years in the State Prison thereafter, for forgery and embezzlement in three cases of cashing and using unemployment benefit checks made to colored unemployed workers in the Wilmington section, in New Hanover Superior Court last week.

Judge Henry Stevens, presiding, warned savings banks and Building and Loan officials that they had almost become parties to the actions by cashing or crediting numbers of these benefit checks made to others for Allen. While seven indictments were brought against him, and sentences in the other four were to run concurrently, many checks and several hundred dollars were involved in other cases that might have been prosecuted.

Solicitor David Sinclair prosecuted the cases, on evidence produced by Adrin J. Newton, general counsel for the Commission. Allen submitted to all of the indictments.

Wilfred Bynum, negro, formerly with Allen in the Wilmington office, were indicted Friday for forgery and will be tried on the charge in New Hanover County Recorder's Court Tuesday. They were implicated in the charges by Allen, after his sentence.

DAIRYING EXPERT URGES KEEPING OF MILK COWS

Says Cows Are Most Efficient Producers Of Food When Properly Fed.

A cow is the most efficient producer of food known when it is properly fed, says Prof. R. H. Ruffner, head of the Department of Animal Husbandry and Dairying at State College. Because milk is the most nearly complete human food, he urges that every farmer in North Carolina keep at least two good milk cows for a year-round family milk supply.

"Increasing dairy production is the logical and desirable development in North Carolina because of the long pasture season, increased grain and roughage production, and availability of cottonseed meal and other feeds rich in proteins," Prof. Ruffner declared. "Income from dairy products, important though it is, often is secondary on many farms to the value of these products in furnishing essential food for the family."

The State College professor pointed out that a cow needs a well-balanced ration to supply the proteins, fats, vitamins, and minerals that are in milk. Adequate nutrients are needed, also, to maintain body weight and to develop a strong calf each year.

Cottonseed meal is rich in essential protein, and is also a good source of phosphorus; silage, hay, and cottonseed hulls are economical sources of carbohydrates and fats; and many grains, including corn, oats, hay, and grain by-products, such as wheat bran, are available for a balanced ration in North Carolina.

Cows will eat about two pounds of dry roughage and six pounds of silage daily for each 100 pounds of live weight, but Prof. Ruffner bemoans the fact that frequently less than one-half this amount is fed.
