Crafty Operator's Place Has Visitors

Person County Sheriff M. T. Clayton tells this one. On Friday of this past week he and a number of deputies staged a raid in the Allensville community, getting for their pains between 1,000 and 1,200 gallons of mash and the equipment, but before they took it they ran into a new type of barbed-wire entanglement. The still operator, crafty man, had strands of black No. 10 thread suspended about two and a half feet from the ground as a fence around his place of activity. In addition, he left a small drawstring purse hanging from the limb of the tree where he tied the last knot.

Sheriff Clayton says he is willing to give the purse and contents to the owner, if said owner dares claim his cash.

Curtis Long, Roxboro lad, brother of D. D. V. Long, says that he is no longer a "jitterbug". Curtis recently issued the statement that he was older now and that he was a mature business man, therefore, he could not afford to be seen "jitterbugging". This column passes this sad news on to the people of this community who had hoped to see Curtis in action during "Hospitality Week".

Arthur Bradsher, twin brother of Dewey, has decided to move to Roxboro and thus look forward to his future here. Arthur is a young man; look at Dewey and you can see how young he really is, and so he should make Roxboro a very valuable citizen. Time alone will tell.

Here is a list of new houses that will be glad to have any number of guests during "Hospitality Week": the houses of Jack Hughes, Arthur Rimmer, Jack Fowler, Jimmy Millican, Tom Shaw and Ivey James. No invitations are needed. People are urged to come right in and make themselves at home. There will be plenty to eat and hospitality will reign supreme. The houses are all new and everything will be just right for guests who would like to spend a week in the "Courteous City".
