One To Six Has Complications Says Sanitarian Fowler

Sanitarian T. J. Fowler, of this city, who with S. B. Satterwhite, of Allensville, went to Mocksville to attend a district meeting of the Reserve Officers corps, knows what it is to be the last man. Coming back from Mocksville Sunday, Mr. Fowler was approaching Greensboro when his machine came to a sudden halt, because the driver in front had to do the same thing.

Mr. Fowler, who got out to investigate damages which were extensive, discovered his to be the sixth and last car piled one upon another because driver number one—up front—had made an equally sudden stop to avoid being hit by an on-coming machine.

Mr. Fowler was not hurt. His car was and had to undergo treatment for a bashed front end in a Greensboro garage. Mr. Satterwhite, principal of Allensville school, suffered a dislocated knee.

And now Mr. Fowler, who is glad there was not another car behind his own to finish the job; will have to begin the job of trying to collect from the man in front of him, who will collect from the man in front, etc. Multiply that six times, says Mr. Fowler, and you have a headache.
