Social Survey Shows Trends In Habitats

Many Of Women Of Questionable Character Come From Marginal Areas.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The typical prostitute is a farmer's daughter.

That conclusion was reached in the April-June issue of the Federal Probation Quarterly which is devoted to a survey of prostitution, said Miss Helen Hironimus, warden of the Federal Reformatory for Women at Alderson, W. Va.

"The typical prostitute is a young woman in her early twenties, undernourished, with scanty, cheap, untidy clothing, the product of an insecure and unstable rural existence. Ordinarily, she is rather inarticulate and bewildered at finding herself in unfamiliar surroundings far from home, confined for doing something which she considered her own personal affair."

A study of 100 women arrested in Army camp areas around Fort Bragg, and Camp Forrest, Tenn., revealed that:

Nearly all were reared in rural areas and only nine in cities.

Half of the group came from farm homes, all but six of which were those of share-croppers or tenant farmers.

Forty three came from "broken homes."

Of the 53 who had married, 31 were reported to have been separated or divorced.

Thirty-one illegitimate children were listed among the group. Their work histories were extremely limited: 18 had been domestics; 15 claimed experiences as waitresses in taverns, tourist camps and dance halls.

Sixty-eight of the women were white, 20 were Negroes and 12 were Croatan Indians, the latter being residents of an Indian settlement in North Carolina. The youngest was 15; the oldest 65.

It was disclosed that participation in sex activities on a commercial basis, in many instances, dated from the construction of military camps in their areas of residence. In almost all cases, women over 30 closely allied their activities as prostitutes with excessive drinking.

Eliot Ness of the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services pointed out that Selective Service examinations "indicate the startling fact that 3,200,000 persons in the United States have syphilis now."

GARDNER OUT KERR SCOTT ON FENCE

McLendon said he had practically given up the thought of being a candidate, but that Gardner's action had caused him to reconsider. "I'll have to think about it," he said.

On capitol square, where rumors and speculation flew thick and fast, there was talk of a dark horse. And none doubted but there was plenty of time for one to get in the race.

While the senatorial race merely bubbled, the gubernatorial fight was almost ready to bubble over. Definitely in the campaign were Dr. Ralph McDonald, of Winston-Salem, who recently resigned his extension department post at the University of North Carolina; Judge Wilson Warlick, of Hickory, and R. Gregg Cherry, of Gastonia, former speaker and present state senator.

Of the three, Warlick was the only one who had not burned his bridges behind him. He said in a statement a few days ago that he would make a definite announcement at a later date. That was expected to be but a mere formality. Yet Raleigh speculated on the topic of a conversation Warlick and Cherry had in Gastonia the other day. Warlick was holding court there at the time.

McDonald, whom Hoey defeated in 1936, now is actively campaigning through the state. But neither he nor his opponents has announced campaign or publicity managers.

DAVENPORT HEARS NEW BATTLE CRY

(continued from front page) had never been before, and they were completely surprised because they thought it impossible. We pushed so far and so fast our supplies had to be dropped by bomber, and for twenty-one days we didn't have our clothes off night or day. Food was very light and none dared use water for such things as washing the face or hands. When we came out we looked like a bunch of bums—dirty and unshaven, but needless to say, very, very proud.

"If you could have seen the way those boys fought and sweated there could be no doubt in your mind, or anyone else's—not even Tojo's—as to who is going to win this war.

"As you were in the last war you undoubtedly remember some amusing things that happened. There are plenty of them in this one, too. Once, when the Japs were counter attacking, a Jap soldier, rushing forward, shouted, 'Blood for the Emperor! Blood for the Emperor!' And one of our soldiers shouted back, 'Blood for Eleanor!' (referring to the President's wife) as he blasted away at him. Even at a time like that you can't hold back a smile."

And that's the way Lieutenant Davenport is fighting. He left Roxboro on a cool Spring day last year. In his pocket were sealed orders, orders taking him to Hawaii and to the "Blood for the Emperor" jungle. On that last night in Roxboro he sat for hours talking to a friend and seeking some way to get across to the general public just what the boys who were leaving here would be up against. He was serious about it then and he is serious about it now, as Scoutmaster Haskett and others who have heard from him can testify.
