

MCMILLAN NOW VICE COMMANDER, IN VETERAN UNIT

Tar Heel Wins Honor At American Legion National Convention.

OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 25.—The American Legion this week endorsed United States participation in a postwar association of nations to maintain peace but it specified that the interests of the United States should come first. The endorsement was in the form of a resolution adopted at the closing session of the 25th annual convention at which Warren H. Atherton, of Stockton, Calif., was elected national commander succeeding Roane Waring.

the convention were: Edward A. Mulroony, Wilmington, Delaware; Hector G. Staples, Rockland, Me.; E. A. Littlefield, Salt Lake city, Utah; Roy L. McMullan Raleigh, N. C., and Martin V. Coffey, Middletown, Ohio.

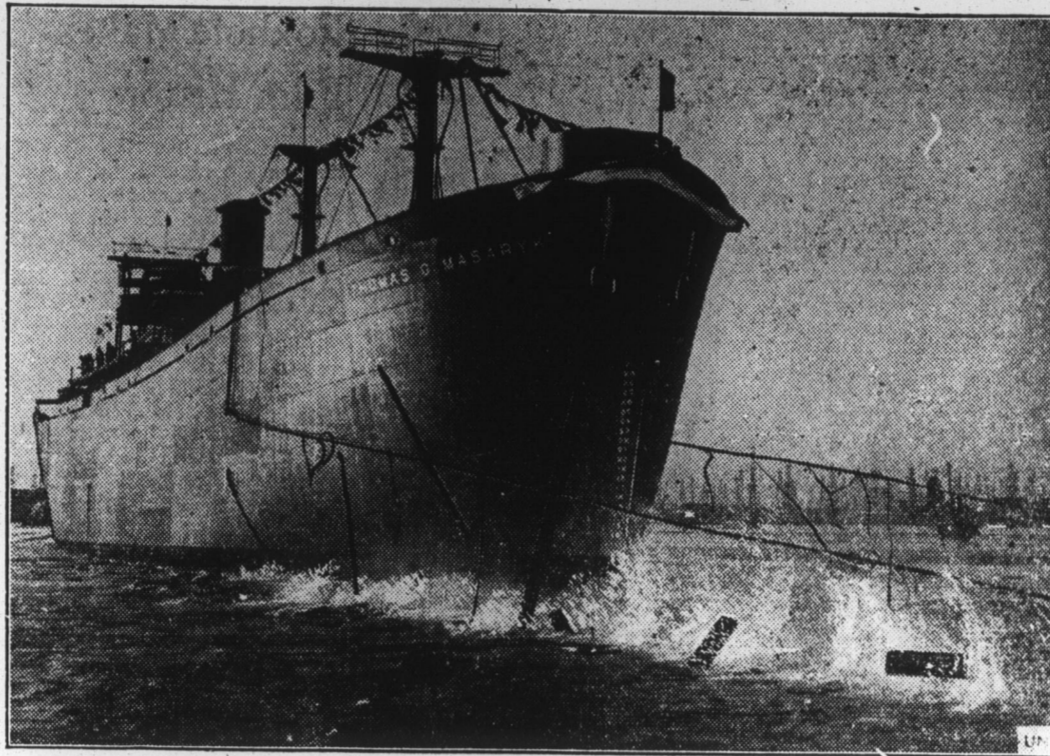

Chaplain: Father John F. McManus, of Wilson, Kan. The choice of the next convention city will be made by the national executive committee.

The resolution approving participation in world affairs included the statement "our own national interest must ever be our first concern," and avoided specific suggestions on how to maintain the peace. "It would be premature now to state with particularity how the peace shall be implemented and enforced," it said.

It demanded that aggressor nations be disarmed forever and "made impotent to provoke another world conflict," and that no peace be made except on the basis of unconditional surrender. Atherton has served as national defense chairman of the Legion since 1939 and accompanied Waring on an aerial tour of north Africa battle fronts last spring.

In the first world war, Atherton enlisted as a private and was commissioned a first lieutenant before he was sent to France in April, 1918. Less than a year later he was promoted to captain, a rank he held in the reserve for 16 years.

The new commander, the father of four children, was a charter member of the American Legion post at Stockton. His rise to national commander was preceded by service as executive committee member, post commander, district commander, department commander and in several offices in the national organization.

The Legion adopted other resolutions, prepared by the foreign relations committee, which reaffirmed the Legion's "faith in the foreign policy" of the government; endorsed the good neighbor policy; pledged that citizens of conquered nations will be liberated, and demanded that the nazi, fascist and Japanese leaders be brought to "stern and unrelenting justice."

Adm. Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the United States fleet, told the Legion delegates that the recent task force blows at Marcus island and the Gilberts predicted the "shape of things to come" and he warned Japan to expect new naval and air attacks.

supply officers for the units on the post. A visual inventory card system makes it possible to tell at a glance when the stock on hand of any item is running low. This is promptly replenished by requisition on the army depot at Charlotte, insuring that adequate supplies of all properties will be available constantly. Established to function as the distribution center for all units, the Quartermaster warehouses are geared to a rapid turnover. As in all other army branches, efficiency and speed are the watchwords. And to these might be added the time-honored slogan, "If you don't see it, ask for it," because whatever is needed in the way of clothing and individual equipment and supplies can be found there.

With a constant stock valued at approximately $9,000,000, the Quartermaster warehouses at Camp Butner compare with the large department stores throughout the country. Twenty-five military employees, including eleven members of Camp Butner's WAC detachment, and approximately 75 civilian employees comprise the "sales," clerical, and receiving and shipping force. Covering literally blocks of ground, the warehouses are arranged to make possible the greatest efficiency in storing and handling property. Everything has its assigned place and no time need ever be lost in trying to locate merchandise. Cartons and cases are lined up with the precision of soldiers in formation, and rigidly enforced fire regulations dictate the area left free at the walls and between rows. Two supervisory inspection tours daily insure that all regulations are complied with and that complete cleanliness in and about the warehouses prevails. Perpetual inventories on property in stock are kept as items are removed and given out to
