The Gospel According To You

There's a sweet old story translated for man, But writ in the long, long ago—The Gospel according to Mark, Luke and John—Of Christ and His mission below.

Men read and admire the Gospel of Christ, With its love so unending and true;

But what do they say, and what do they think, Of the Gospel according to you?

'Tis a wonderful story, that Gospel of love, As it shines in the Christ life divine; And, oh, that its truth might be told again

In the story of your life and mine!

Unselfishness mirrors in every scene; Love blossoms on every sod; And back from its vision the heart come to tell The wonderful goodness of God.

You are writing each day a letter to men; Take care that the writing is true; 'Tis the only Gospel that some will read—

That Gospel according to you. (Anonymous.)

WHAT MAKES A PEOPLE GREAT—RELIGION IN THE HOME

LESSON TEXT: Deuteronomy 6:4-12. MEMORY SELECTION: Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.—Psalm 145:2.

Home, church, school and the state—these are the four institutions which determine the greatness of a people—and the most influential of all is the home.

What a child becomes under the nurture of the home will determine his interest in the church, his attitude toward school, and eventually his value as a citizen of the nation. How tragic then that we are giving so little attention to our American homes!

The religious life of the home is the most important element of its activity, for it is the determining factor in the life of the child. It is in the home that the child's whole existence centers and from which he receives the repeated impressions, day by day, which determine character and destiny. It is in the home that the parent has the opportunity to demonstrate the reality of the faith professed in the church, and to show the child that Christianity really counts in the ordinary experiences of life.

Three things appear in our lesson as characterizing the religion of the home.

I. Worship (vv. 4, 5).

Twice a day the orthodox Jew repeats the words of these verses: namely, at the time of prayer, morning and night. They remind him of his personal relationship to God, and they recall one of God's primary reasons for calling Israel to be his people. They were to be a national witness to the one true God in the midst of the almost universal worship of many gods. They were to stand for monotheism in the midst of polytheism.

So important is the complete devotion of man—and that brings in the whole family—to God that when Jesus was asked what was the greatest of all commandments (see Mark 12:28-31), he named this passage together with Leviticus 19:18.

Nothing should take precedence over the true worship of God in our hearts, and in the hearts of all those we hold dear in our households. The Eternal One, the Source of Life, the All-Powerful One, he is "our God" (v. 4) and he looks to us for complete and constant devotion to him. Let us give it.

II. Instruction (vv. 6-9).

It was not enough that these words should be repeated in some regular or formal worship, but they were to be taught to the children in the home with all faithfulness and diligence—and by the parents.

We are far too eager to delegate the teaching of our children to others. In religious matters it is the church and the Sunday school which are responsible. Many parents do not even take their boys and girls to the house of God. They just send them. Mark it well, such parents are delinquent in their duties to God and to their families.

But our vital point is this—it is the business of the home to teach religion, to do it regularly, and to make it a normal and natural part of daily life.

This is a matter of great significance. The faith which we profess in the church must be effectively brought into the home. It is not enough to carry a Bible on Sunday. It should be in use in the home throughout the week; not only in family worship, but in the incidents of daily life.

The family altar has gradually disappeared, and it is regrettable that it has, for the testimony of generations indicates that in family worship some of the most useful men and women of all ages have received the direction of life which made them great for God.

III. Remembrance (vv. 10-12).

Israel had a history full of the magnificent mercies of God. In the day when, by his help and blessing they were to be established in their land, they were to recall his blessings and recognize his goodness.

There are few, if any, more powerful incentives to faith and courageous living than the remembrance of past blessings. To recall how God made it possible for ordinary men and women to, by faith, subdue kingdoms, quench the fires of persecution, turn back the armies of aliens, to become strong in the midst of weakness (read Heb. 11) is to make one ready for the battles of life.

Every family has its dark and trying days, its experiences which rock one back on his heels in astonishment and fear—and in the Christian family God has always been the answer—the solution to every problem, the provider for every need. Keep such memories fresh in the thinking of boys and girls and they will be ready for the storms of life.

Help them to a great faith in a great Saviour and you have given them something more precious than all the riches of all the earth.

"Fly" Says Bill

URNS

Suppose you are in an automobile. If you make a turn too fast on a flat road there is a tendency for the car to skid outward. Even if you made a sharp turn fairly slowly, this tendency to skid would be evident. However, if the road were banked the correct amount (the degree of bank depending upon the speed of the car, and the sharpness of the turn) this tendency would be eliminated. Similarly, if a car made a turn which was banked too steeply it would have a tendency to slip down toward the inside of a turn.

Instead of an airplane flying along a road which is banked, the pilot banks the plane itself, by side pressure on the stick. At the same time he determines his rate of pressure on the rudder, and back pressure on the stick. Thus, whether he slips or skids depends on whether or not his pressures on the controls are coordinated. If these control pressures are coordinated, he will have just the right amount of bank for his rate of turn.

A Note On Coordination

The term "Coordination" (or "coordination pressure," "coordinated controls," etc.) is one which you will meet frequently in flying. Therefore it is important that you understand clearly what it means. Coordinated pressure on the controls merely means that pressures are applied to one or more controls simultaneously, or sequence, in such a manner that the plane does exactly what you want it to do.

Coordination is important in all maneuvers, but in your elementary flight training you will hear it referred to more often in regard to turns than in regard to any other maneuver. This is because most of the maneuvers in your primary training are combinations of turns.

Good coordination in a turn requires that pressures be applied to stick and rudder in such a manner that the plane neither skids nor slips. Since in your turns your air speed will be fairly constant, the excellence of your turn depends upon how well your rate of turn and amount of bank are adjusted to each other. The pressures on the controls used in making a turn will be discussed shortly.

You will probably wonder how you can tell if you skid or slip in a turn. The explanation is simple. During a turn, the same forces acting on the plane that cause it to skid and slip are acting on you, the pilot. If the plane skids, you will tend to slide over toward the edge of the seat that is on the outside of the turn. If the plane slips, you will tend to slide over toward the edge of the seat that is on the inside of the turn. In a good turn, neither of these tendencies will be evident. You will merely feel as if you were being pushed down into the seat. (This results from the centrifugal force that is developed.)

Remember, and this is important, these forces which act on the ship will act on you only if you are "riding with the plane." Therefore, don't lean away from the bank, or attempt to keep your body perpendicular to the horizon. Relax and try to feel the effect of pressures on the weight of your body.

You can't detect skids or slips unless you are "Riding with the plane."

An even better indicator of skids or slips is a "Ball Bank" instrument, mounted on the instrument panel. This consists of a metal ball resting loosely inside a slightly curved glass tube. In a slip or skid, the ball rolls to one side or the other from its normal central position and thus permits the pilot to "see" as well as "feel" a skid or slip. Such an instrument is more sensitive than "seat sense" of even a good pilot and hence is extremely useful in perfecting your coordination. Do not, however, rely solely on this instrument. You will probably fly some airplanes not so equipped and need to be able to detect slips and skids without it.

Right now you will be concerned with medium banked, and gentle banked turns. A medium banked turn is one in which the angle of bank is between 30 and 50 degrees. In a gentle banked turn, the angle of bank is less than 30 degrees. Your instructor will demonstrate the correct relationship of the lowered wing with the horizon in both of these turns. Both of these maneuvers are done at cruising engine R.P.M.

Turtle Has Neck Trouble;

Operation Yields Cyst SAN FRANCISCO. — Napoleon, the turtle, stuck his neck out here for a tonsillectomy.

There was danger that the big green reptile at San Francisco's Steinhart aquarium would become but a hollow shell, for every time he stuck his neck out he got a lump in it and couldn't eat.

He thrived up between decks to a scant 88 pounds, so Dr. Wilbert Chapman, curator of fishes for the California Academy of Sciences, ordered an operation.

A few swift incisions, a tied artery and the whole thing was over in 15 minutes. Napoleon showed signs of immediate recovery.

The tonsillectomy, not the turtle, was mock. The "surgeons" got credit for a cyst. January and February are regarded as the critical winter months in management of the pullet laying flock.
