CONSERVATION NEWS

By L. B. Hairr & W. L. Moore

Charles Greenlee of Woodlawn states that his blue grass pasture is and has been unusually good this fall. Mr. Greenlee says he has found it advisable to feed his pasture. Then in return, the pasture will feed the cattle and there is where his profit comes in.

Farm plans were recently completed on the farm of E. W. Griffin, H. D. Jessup, G. F. Cathy, W. F. Justice, M. L. Grant, Ernest Edwards, H. T. Cline, and W. W. Caloway. These plans include terracing, strip cropping, contour cultivation, establishing permanent hay and pasture, farm drainage, and seeding wildlife field borders. The Catawaba Soil Conservation District will assist these farmers in applying these planned practices.

Elbert Wilson of Glenwood reports that the mixture of orchard grass and Ladino clover that he planted this fall is looking fine.

H. H. Bennett, chief of the Soil Conservation Service says, "Contour cultivation, terracing, strip cropping, and many other practices are used to control erosion and conserve rainfall in the soil for crop use. Rainfall is likewise stored in ponds and reservoirs."
