Drama Of "Noah" To Be Presented Saturday Night

The drama of "Noah" by Andre Obey of the contemporary French theater will be performed at Black Mountain college Saturday night at 8:30. It is the story of a farmer chosen by God to preserve life when the whole earth is drowned in a vindictive deluge. Noah is attacked as a sorcerer by the society of men, and his own family, incited by the restless egotism of his son Shem, mutinies against him. But the flood is outlasted, the word is kept, and men and beasts seek the land again, and again turn it into a jungle. Noah's grieving heart asks for reassurance, and God answers with the rainbow.

This timeless myth of the victory of faith simply held is expressed by Obey partly in realistic dialogue and partly in stylized and rhythmic design. Wesley Huss, recently appointed from Hedgerow Theater to the dramatics faculty of Black Mountain college, is directing the production and will act the title role. Beatrice Huss, also of Hedgerow, will play Mrs.

Noah. The cast of Noah's children and their wives and the animal voyagers on the ark will be drawn from the student body and faculty of the college.

David Sear, accomplished banjoist, will perform the music which has been specially conceived for this interpretation of the play. The sets have been designed to convey the child-like and free imaginative style of the drama. They are meant to recapture the vividness and simplicity of picture books. Parts of the story are represented through dance.

Although played by John Gielgud and company in England in 1935 with Alec Guinness and Jessica Tandy in the cast, "Noah" has been rarely performed in this country. The English version has been made by Arthur Wilmurt.

The public is invited to attend the performance. There will be no admission charge. Contributions may be made to defray the cost of production.
