STUDENTS ENJOY—

From Page 1, This Sec. to a room in which different minerals were displayed. We were shown many very interesting minerals. Some of them that we saw were mined in North Carolina. The most important of the minerals mined in North Carolina were mica and feldspar. Mica is mined near Spruce Pine. Feldspar is also mined in the western part of the state. North Carolina also has other minerals in quantities: talc, which is mined in Murphy, and tungsten which is mined in Henderson. This is said to be the largest tungsten mine in the United States. We also saw some industrial and jewelry diamonds. The guide told us there had been 10 real diamonds found in North Carolina as far as anyone knows. They were found in streams, not in ores, and their source is unknown.

After we had seen all the different minerals, we were shown a gygocounter which prospectors use to locate different minerals. This machine measures the radio activity of minerals. The louder the static of a mineral, the greater the radio activity. We were then taken into a dark room where we were shown some different ores in which there were different minerals. These minerals were fluorescent when an ultra violet light was displayed upon them. Several of the ores contained calcite, fluorite and moncezite. These minerals appeared as beautiful colors under the ultra violet light.

We found that the North Carolina Mineral Laboratory tries to solve all commercial problems brought to them, such as trying to reduce the percentage of iron in mica. It has solved several problems which are being used today. It also creates its own problems for experimental purposes. After we had visited the laboratory, we visited the Holsum bakery. We had been studying nutrition which included the properties in bread. So we visited the bakery to see how bread was really made. We were shown how the bread was mixed and the different machines through which it passed before was baked. We saw how bread was made into different kinds loaves automatically. We found that 800 loaves were baked every twenty-five minutes.

After we had seen how bread was made, we went into the place where cakes and cookies were prepared. We enjoyed this part of all because it smelled so good though you could eat all the cakes and cookies there. We had been studying about the making of bread in our geography book to and we found it very interesting. We were shown all the parts of the bakery.

We enjoyed going through both the North Carolina Mineral Laboratory and also the Holsum Bakery.
