move. The outside was repainted white and the inside, a willow green. A covered walkway now connects the new office with the building called T-1.

Now that the first construction phase is over, we can look back on notable accomplishment. Some 10 prefabricated steel buildings have been erected. Of these, eight are storage buildings and two house both shops and offices. The engineering department has already moved into its new offices in the production and assembly building in the bottoms, the rest of which will house assembly processes. The other new office and shop building should be occupied in the near future.

The office partitions in the production and assembly building have been painted with colors suggested by Dupont experts in industrial painting. The selection of colors used was based on color psychology and the experience gained through use of colors in thousands of plants. Colors selected were: outside walls and offices, two shades of green; hallway, yellow and green; men's washrooms, two tones of blue, and ladies' washrooms, peach and terra cotta.

Ernest Brandenberger is expected to return next Saturday from an extensive visit to Switzerland. Mr. Brandenberger is one of the Swiss technical advisers.
