HOW A LOW-FRICTION FORD TRUCK ENGINE SAVES GAS

By the noted author and TV personality of "Ford Theatre" and "The Nature of Things"
DR. ROY K. MARSHALL

- Three remarkable new Ford Truck engines can cut your gas bill as much as 14%. Here's how they work.
- Ball of fire represents gas-and-air burning in each cylinder. This is the power to drive rear wheels.
- But internal friction (light area) steals power from rear wheels. . . eats it up to move engine parts.
- Ford engineers have reduced the amount of power lost to internal friction up to 30%. They do this by making bore and stroke of the engine nearly equal.
- Long piston stroke in an engine means a lot of power used up, just to overcome friction between piston and cylinder.
- But short piston stroke, as in the new Ford Truck engines, means less friction, less power eaten up to move cylinder.
- Up to 20% less piston travel per road-mile in Ford Truck engines means power 'rescued' from friction.
- More power from ball of fire reaches rear wheels. Ford's new low-friction truck engines can save you up to one gallon of gas in every seven.

Ford now offers FIVE great truck engines! Three V-8's, two Sixes, and truck models for every job, ranging from 101-h.p. Pickups to 155-h.p. BIG JOBS!
