Hitchhiking Is Frowned Upon In Carolina

RALEIGH—The gesturing, up-turned thumb, universally recognized highball among wanderers of the highway is strictly frowned upon in North Carolina. Fact is, it's against the law.
However, like many statutes, the ban against soliciting rides from motorists on public roadways has fallen by the wayside. For one thing, the transportation free loaders have decreased in number, thus drawing enforcement eyes to more pressing problems. And too, nearly everybody drives nowadays since the Department of Motor Vehicles knows officially of 1,226,339 vehicles. Among non-drivers, the old time shank's mare traveler is virtually unknown. Transients feel, if they don't own cars, there are plenty of others who do. Thus the declining, but aggressive corps of hitchhikers who unknowingly flout the law regularly.
College students are perhaps the worst offenders according to the State Highway Patrol. At football games they all but commandeer slow moving cars, creating additional hazards for hard pressed officers directing traffic. Fortunately a stern warning, with a hint of indictment, breaks up this gay game—sometimes. And it would indeed be an unobservant driver who failed to notice the platoon of Wake Forest student-thumbers who line upper Person Street in Raleigh every afternoon. The young Deacon law students may not know it yet, but they are breaking a duly enacted state law.

The same situation prevails in West Raleigh where dozens of State College students bend their thumbs and break the law. In education centers throughout the state, week-end thumbers create minor traffic problems.
If there is a regular semi-organized corps of hitch hikers, it would be students say extensive travelers.
And while most safety officials condemn the practice, it's often overlooked in blanket preparations for highway safety promotion. The Department of Motor Vehicles produces no statistics on fatalities and injuries among hitch hikers. That some few are injured, and perhaps killed, every year goes without saying. Thus an appeal to those who thumb rides regularly to "cease and desist" is probably the best answer.
For the academic minded the manual of motor vehicle laws, in one short paragraph, presents the state's point of view on hitch hiking. In section 20-175 it reads: "No person shall stand in the travel portion of the highway for the purpose of soliciting a ride from the driver of any private vehicle."
And for the hair-splitters, the "travel portion" of the highway means right up to where the pavements ends at the shoulder.
