Six Electronic Plants Select Sites In State

Electronics plants in North Carolina, known as the nation's leading manufacturer of textiles and tobacco, are increasing rapidly. Six large companies began operations in or started construction of new facilities in the State last year. They will employ approximately 9,000, according to Paul Kelly, head of the Division of Commerce and Industry of the Department of Conservation and Development.

All of the plants are located in or near cities in which important textile or tobacco industries, or both, already existed. This diversification was a feature of North Carolina's industrial expansion in 1952, which ran the scale from arms (expansion of the Oerlikon plant near Swannanoa) to zippers (establishment of plants by Talon, Inc., at Woodland, Belmont and Stanley).

Principal additions to North Carolina's electronics roster during 1952 were:

International Resistance Company of Philadelphia, Pa., has under construction a $200,000 plant at Asheville that will initially employ 225 persons, and plans to expand gradually to about 500. This firm manufactures resistors used in electronic and electrical devices to limit and control electrical current.

Western Electric Company has under construction a plant near Winston-Salem that will cost approximately $4,250,000 and will employ approximately 2500 production employees. This plant will manufacture electronic equipment for the armed forces for which it holds government contracts. Western Electric now operates 4 major plants in Winston-Salem, one in Greensboro and one in Burlington. The total employment in all of their North Carolina plants is around 10,000.

Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., of New York purchased a 55,000 sq. foot cabinet plant in High Point to manufacture cabinets for television sets, employing approximately 200 persons. Plans call for the assembly of complete television sets here at a later date.

Cornell-Dubilier Electric Corp. of Plainfield, N. J., plans to construct a 275,000 sq. ft. air-conditioned building in Sanford which will employ more than 2,000 workers. This electronic concern will manufacture capacitors to be used in automobile ignition, radio, television and in equipment for the armed forces. The decision to locate in Sanford was based on the success of the company's other southern plant, now in operation in Fuquay Springs.

Westinghouse Electric Corp. is now grading a site on which to construct a multi-million dollar watt meter manufacturing plant on a 100-acre site near Raleigh. The plant will employ around 2500 workers, and it is estimated that the investment will be around $12,000,000.

General Electric Company began operations in its electric blanket and heating pad plant in Asheville recently. When this plant reaches full production it will turn out $46 million worth of merchandise a year. The initial 300 workers will be increased substantially in the future. The modern 134,000 sq. ft. plant houses the entire operations for both electric blankets and heating pads and has a payroll in excess of $1,500,000 a year. G. E. has had a small but highly successful operation at Goldsboro for several years.
