What Makes You Think —

If the fellow driving the car behind yours is a mind reader, you're safe without making signals.
Unfortunately for you, less than one per cent of the population is readers.
So you'd better assume that other drivers haven't the slightest idea what you're about to do—stop, slow down, turn left or turn right. A shocking number of all accidents are caused by slowing, stopping or turning without proper signals. That's why you can often prevent an accident by making the proper signals—letting other drivers know, unmistakably, what you plan to do.
In North Carolina, the signal for slowing down or stopping is the left hand out and straight down, moving from side to side call attention to it, if necessary.
A left turn is signalled by the left arm held out straight, a finger pointing to the left. A right turn is signalled by holding the arm straight up, elbow bent at right angles. Or by the mechanical turn signals, if you have them.
In either case, your life is in your hands—or your hand signals.
Good reason to be sure your mechanical turn signals and stop lights are working properly. If not—and if you're relying on them without hand signals you really need a mind reader behind you.
Signalling, remember, is more than just a courtesy—it's a life-saving necessity.

Seek Autos With Altered Numbers

The Motor Vehicles Department today issued a directive to its field agents to be on the lookout for cars and trucks being offered for sale with concealed or altered identification numbers.
Motor Vehicles Commissioner Edward Scheidt took steps to stop the practice of concealing identification numbers which some persons and firms are reported to be doing.
The practice stems from what has been called "car bootlegging," Scheidt said. Some firms reported selling used cars and representing them as new cars are allegedly concealing or altering the numbers to prevent identification.
