More About—Reflections

cording to his version: "Why you didn't come close to catching that pass. You trapped it on the second hop and turned as if to throw to first base because you forgot and thought you were playing baseball. Reminded that the referee called it a TD, his Explanation was: "Sure he GAVE it to us. But I had given him a going over on the play before and he was trying to even things up. That was probably the first time in history that a touchdown was scored on the second hop."

Now listen to the quarterback, the guy who threw it: "A touchdown, sure it was a touchdown pass. But anybody could have caught it. It was nice and easy, soft and smooth as silk. All you had to do was reach up and hold your hands and I hit you right on the button. You couldn't have dropped it if you'd tried."

Those are the three versions. Take your pick. Hiwassee agrees with Reeves. What really happened is a secret.
