Repeal of the act, passed in 1933, had been sought by the City of Asheville which furnishes surplus water to the 11 water and sewer districts of Buncombe county. City officials had cited the example of other state municipalities that charge those living outside the city boundaries as much as three a bookkeeper. times that which is charged those inside. The Sullivan Act provides simply that the city will not charge district water users more than is charged city users.

chairman, pointed out that each of the 11 water districts of the county issued bonds with which to purchase and to install its own water and sewer lines. In the Swannanoa district alone this amounted to $1,873,000
