We still love her, and tho' she's gone,
Her mem'ry lingers yet.
She whose heart was filled with song,
We never shall forget.
She cheered so many lives while here,
That she was loved by all.
Her spirit sweet, there's no fear
When she heard Jesus' call.
O God! please make her happy there,
She was so gentle here,
Keep her in Thy mansion fair,
An angel form so dear.

THANKS
When Winter's finished sifting snowflakes into Spring
Our feathered friends with harp and flute and zither bring
A chorus of thanksgiving for food and strength of wing.
But faithless man awaits the aging of the year,
When all the fruits of field and forest are mature,
And for their blessings he can be more sure.
Yet, even then, his harp may oft have broken strings,

And oft his thanks ascend on crimped wings,
When given only for material things.
—J. P. Parker.
Republished by request as thanksgiving because of the return of "our feathered friends with harp and flute and zither."
