SANDERS POINTS OUT—

Agriculture has shifted in recent years from a rustic way of life to a highly technical business, requiring great skill in production and marketing, enormous capital investment and elaborate machinery; from the production of row crops to an animal agriculture with poultry, milk and meat being major sources of cash income.

Grassland farming, contour tillage and reforestation are conserving our soils and ushering in a new era of good living on the land. The South is setting the social pattern for the rest of the nation. The South's rural population is young and vigorous. Due to the high birthrate on Southern farms, the South with only 27 per cent of the nation's total population actually accounted for 59 per cent of the national increase in population of the United States, during the war period. We are rearing in many rural communities of the South four boys and girls for each one that will be needed in the agriculture of tomorrow. The other three will leave the farm and move to town to make their contribution to an urban civilization. Industry is tapping this rich rural resource which augurs well for the future of Dixie.

ter in rural progress of the South today.

They are manning the machines and supplying the skills that have made the "New South". Basic in the South's sensational step forward has been a program of sound land management, a movement to put every acre of soil to work doing the job for which it is best suited. Millions of acres of eroded, roun-down hill-sides that once grew broom-sage, brush and briars are now covered by a blanket of green pastures, with "cattle grazing upon a thousand hills". Stock farming is balancing crop farming.

Superstitions, Traditions Mark New Year Scene

Traditions and superstitions have long been a part of the New Year scene around the world. The Chinese believe one must pay up all their debts if the New Year is to be a successful one. The English, on the other hand, consider it a good idea to start a savings account on Jan. 1, since what you do on the New Year's Day is indicative of what you will do the rest of the year. One of the most widespread superstitions concerns the "first-footer," the first person to enter a household on New Year's morning. In early days, women and light-haired men were considered "unlucky" first-footers. Ancient custom in Japan was to scatter parched beans about the house, supposedly driving away evil influences and inviting good luck to enter. The Romans were accustomed to hanging tiny masks of Bacchus upon trees and vines, the idea being to impart fertility to every side of the tree to which the masks were turned by the wind. Peasant families in various parts of the world once baked special cakes for the New Year. The cake was dashed against the door and as the family members gathered upon the pieces to eat them they prayed that neither hunger nor want should enter the house during the new year. In olden times some families also sought a glimpse into the New Year by "dipping" into the Bible. The head of the family, with his eyes closed, opened the family Bible and indicated a passage with his finger. The text, read and interpreted was supposed to be indicative of the luck—good or bad—that would be in store during the twelve months ahead.
