J. MILLER FINDS—

I looked at the tracks the drizzle had not deformed in any way. These were the largest tracks of a bear I had ever seen. These tracks were only a short distance from the cabin. I went back to the cabin to get dad and the dogs; it took only a few minutes.

Returning to the place where I had found the tracks, we turned the dogs loose. There was an elapse of only a few minutes before the dogs were fighting the bear. I followed the dogs and dad remained in the road. The dogs fought the bear for one hour and fifteen minutes. The bear had traveled about five miles in this time and had crossed some of the roughest terrain in the Blue Ridge mountains. During this time I was trying to catch up with the bear and the dogs. Finally the dogs tired the bear.

When I reached the scene the bear was up in a large oak tree, casually walking out on one of the limbs of the tree. I was afraid he was going to jump out of the tree. Cold chills crept up and down my spine, beads of perspiration broke out on my forehead, and my hands trembled. I was thinking if my shots didn't hit a vital spot the dogs were sure to get killed—dogs lose all sense of danger when a bear has been shot.

I dropped to my knees and then flat on my stomach at the same time pulling my rifle to my shoulder. My steady aim surprised me. I fired three rapid shots at the bear. He had staggered against the body of the tree the second shot; he slowly released his hold on the tree and fell to the ground. I felt like a great load had been lifted from my shoulders, because the bear had not moved after falling, as well as I could see from where I was lying.

When dad arrived at the scene he said, "Son, that is one of the largest bears I have ever seen in these mountains!" My chest grew two inches after receiving this praise from dad; he wasn't the type of person that gave compliments just for a pass time.

I had shot the bear from a point 270 yards away. At this time I was only 13 years old. The bear weighed close to five hundred pounds. The three shots I had fired had all hit the bear in the lungs and spine.

gave Ehlers a wholly unexpected and surprising reaction. In the words of Ehlers' own advertising manager, A. S. Crampton, "This ad will be run again but naturally we shall make an honest woman of the hussy now appearing in our ad." At a gathering of elderly women Aunt Bessie was coaxed to try the first glass of beer she had ever had. After sipping it for a moment, she looked up with a puzzled air.

"How odd," she murmured. "This tastes just like the medicine my husband has been taking for the last 30 years."
