UNIQUE COMMUNITY—
Many summer visitors have observed, and some whose children have taken part in these activities have made praise worthy comments about the interest and planning on the part of Black Mountain citizens.

These activities, of course, have much room for growth, but at least something positive is being attempted.
As for the older people who live here, if they so desire, there are civic, social and literary clubs and organizations and various religious denominations in which they can take part. Whether interest is in hobbies, music, art, nature, literature and other fields, there is some group in Black Mountain in which a satisfaction can be found which is unique to a small community.

Mr. Editor, I wonder if you have brought all this up just to see whether or not we really read The Black Mountain News.

REFLECTIONS—
He knew to the split second when he must be at a certain point in the race in order to equal or to break the world's record. If another runner raced off and left him, Nurmi refused to be drawn out until his watch told him it was time to go. His reasoning was, no doubt, that few were going to equal the world's record and that if he could just keep even with the time he'd come out all right.

When Mr. Davis had completed his talk to the boys, a man who had stood nearby unnoticed walked over and smilingly said: "Thank you very much for using me as an example for your boys. I'm Nurmi, the man you were talking about."

Until that time Mr. Davis didn't know that the Finnish great runner had liked it in America so well that he became an American citizen and remained here. At the time he saw Mr. Davis he was a telegraph operator at Duke university.

Albert L. Kraus of the New York Times describes our changing nation in these words: "In grandfather's day, the typical American consumer paid rent for a flat, rode to work in a street-car, sent his starched collars to laundry and for entertainment took his wife to a vaudeville theatre occasionally. Today he owns a house in the suburbs, drives an automobile to work, gives his wife no-iron shirts to process in an automatic washer-dryer, and watches television for entertainment — all largely because of consumer credit."

This clipping will entitle Mrs. C. D. Thomas and one guest to free admission to see "The King and Four Queens" at the Pix Theater.
