Capacity Crowd Hears Oratorio

There was music in the air at Ridgecrest Baptist assembly the past week when almost 3,000 musicians assembled for the annual Southern Baptist Leadership conference.

Dr. W. Hines Sims of the department of church music, Baptist Sunday School board, was the director of the conference.

A capacity crowd was on hand for the presentation of Felix Mendelssohn's oratorio, "St. Paul," by the 600-voice choir Tuesday night.

Depicting the life of Paul, the oratorio was directed by Dr. Warren M. Angell, dean of fine arts at Oklahoma Baptist university. Soloists were Audrey Nossaman, soprano from the University of Louisville who studied at the Giuseppe Verdi Conservatory in Milan, Italy; bass, James Berry, minister of music at the First Baptist church, Austin, Tex.; Claude Rhea, tenor, an instructor at the New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, who is doing work at Florida State University, and Ann Roberts, alto from Oklahoma Baptist university. Berry and Rhea record for a prominent religious music recording company.

Rose Marie Cooper, Oklahoma Baptist University student, was the pianist, and Robert Fort, Coker college, was the organist.

Because of the deluge of musicians and their musical needs, it was necessary to install additional instruments in the assembly buildings. Eight new pianos and three organs were brought in, bringing the total instruments on the grounds to forty pianos and five organs.

Crowning the thunderous musical refrains from the auditorium was the huge custom-made organ on the stage. Owned and installed by the Wick Organ company of Highland, Ill., the organ consisted of 1021 pipes and is valued at $20,500. George Gibbon, general manager of the company, demonstrated the instrument and counseled music directors concerning organ problems.
