Shown in a picturesque Brussels World's Fair setting is a 1959 Ford Sunliner convertible. Ford offers two convertibles in 1959: the soft-top Sunliner and the retractable hardtop Skyliner. Ford's tasteful styling theme in 1959 is a result of consumer demand for more elegance and dignity, as opposed to gaudiness or extremism. In the background is the Atomium, prominent landmark at the Brussels World's Fair.

Lieut. Twiggs Aids Hurricane Hunt

Thomas E. Twiggs, lieutenant (jg) co-pilot, navigator, son of Mrs. Ellen Lehman of 96 Sta., 6 st., Black Mountain, is serving with Airborne Early Warning Squadron Four, the Navy's "Hurricane Hunters", at Jacksonville, Fla., which spent a busy season keeping tabs on such storms as "Daisy", "Ella", "Helene" and "Ilsa". "Helene" proved to be the most unpredictable, evasive and destructive. Scars of her fury remain today on the Carolina and Delaware coasts.

In order to track "Helene", Squadron Four made 11 reconnaissance flights for a total of 132 hours, radioed 194 weather reports from the storm area, obtained 103 eye fixes on radar and made 16 penetrations into the eye of the hurricane. The "Hurricane Hunters" flights ranged from Roosevelt roads, Puerto Rico, to Baltimore, Md.

"Ilsa", though, started out in a fury after "Helene" but changed her mind and veered out to sea instead of hitting the mainland. But the squadron took no chances and followed her until she no longer proved a threat to the U. S.

Keeping tabs on "Ilsa" chalked up five flights, 88 weather reports, 15 eye fixes and seven penetrations.

With the hurricane season running till the end of December, the squadron remains on the job, ready to ride at the first mention of a storm and give ample warning to areas in the path of danger. Flying super Constellations, carrying crews of 25 each, these flying radar stations can gather and report, in a matter of hours, information which once took days to collect.
