Automobile Tires
Jones purchased an automobile from Smith under a recorded conditional sales contract. Jones, under the terms of the contract, promised to pay $50 a month until the full purchase-price of $3,000 was paid. Smith retained the title of ownership of the automobile as security.
Subsequently Jones needed a set of new tires for the car. They were purchased from Taylor under a recorded chattel mortgage. Under the terms of this contract, Taylor retained the title or ownership to the tires until full purchase-price was paid.
Shortly thereafter, Jones ceased to make his $50 monthly payments on the car. There was a balance due of $800 on the full purchase price of the car.
Smith repossessed the automobile from Jones. May Taylor recover the new tires now on the car in the possession of Smith?
Yes. The Supreme Court of North Carolina has held that the mortgagee of the tires was entitled to recover the possession or value of the tires from the conditional seller of the car.
This was true notwithstanding a provision of the conditional sales contract that the conditional buyer of the car could not create any lien on it for accessories and that such accessories should become a component part of the car. The court said that the provision inured to the benefit of the conditional seller only to the extent of whatever property right the conditional buyer may have had in the accessories. Since the conditional buyer did not have title or ownership in the tires, none was acquired by the conditional seller.
An express provision concerning after-acquired parts of equipment, inserted in a title-retaining instrument under which an automobile has been sold, is binding upon the parties to the agreement but not upon third persons not parties to it. Actual or constructive notice of the title-retaining instrument will not affect the rights of the third persons who subsequently sell to the person in possession under a different title-retaining instrument accessories which can be easily and readily detached without damage to the automobile.

Two Chevy middleweights prove their rawhide stamina!

Top hands on high-country hauls!

Ask any trucker who's been over Wolf Creek Pass, 10,850 feet up in the San Juans: a 9-mile pull to the summit and low gear all the way down. Mr. C. H. Phillips of Alamosa, Colorado, has a 6403 and a 6503 Chevrolet truck that are up over this route the year round, taking sheep and beef to pasture, later marketing the stock in Denver. In less than a year, his Chevy middleweights have averaged about 50,000 miles of this kind of treatment—and they're going stronger than ever! Watch Chevy trucks at work out in range country. It's a sight to see the way they pack into high-up mountain pastures and handle through brush and rock like a cowman's favorite cutting horse. Take any truck work for that matter. Chevy middleweights probably handle a bigger variety of jobs than any trucks alive. About anything you name, including work that used to be reserved strictly for bigger rigs. When a truck's built the way a Chevy is, lean-muscled and rawhide-tough, it takes to ugly trails the same way most trucks roll over the highway. It just keeps going, without a big to-do, but looking good every mile of the way. How they do it is your Chevrolet dealer's department. He'll be glad to supply details and specifications on the type of models you need.

No job's too tough for a Chevrolet truck!
