TAX FACTS FOR THE HOMEOWNER NO. 3" The Home As An Income Producer

(This is one of a series of articles on federal income tax filing. The articles are based on information provided by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants and the North Carolina Association of Certified Public Accountants, in cooperation with the Internal Revenue Service.)

IF YOU rent all or part of your home, the income you receive is taxable. However, the government is only interested in taxing the amount you gain over and above your expense for maintaining the lodging. You can save valuable tax dollars by being aware of the expenses you can deduct from the rent you receive.

Assume that you own an eight room house. Since you only need six rooms, you decide to rent the Home as a Business Office If you can show that it is necother two rooms as a furnished essary for you to work at home apartment. You will now have as a part of earning your income two kinds of deductible expenses, from a business, profession, or those expenses that apply to the job, you may be able to deduct a house as a unit, and those ex-penses that apply particularly to penses as business expenses.

the apartment. As a home owner, you can deduct any property taxes you may have to pay. You can also deduct the interest on a mort-gage. This is true whether you hortion of the following expenses. It may be that you use a room as an office. You have equipped it with a desk, a couple of chairs or other materials for performing your work. You can deduct a gage. This is true whether you portion of the following expenses as legitimate busines expendirent part of the house or not, but there are some additional de-ductions you can take from the rent you receive for the two rooms. You can deduct such items as insurance, repairs, col-lection fees, depreciation, and brokerage commissions. But re-member these deducting ex-temport deduct and some else, you can also deduct any portion of your telephone bill applicable to your business affairs. brokerage commissions. But re-member, these deductible ex-penses must apply directly to the two rooms you are renting. In other words, if you make repairs to the whole house you can only as a deduction. deduct from rent income the cost Some of the Some of the expenses for your home office are fully deductible. of repairs applicable to the two rooms being rented. These are expenses that relate If you supply any utilities such as gas or electricity to your tenant without making a sepa-ciation of your office furniture, and so on.

rate charge, you can deduct a portion of the amount you pay for these utilities from the rent you receive.

Just of your home should be re-ported in Schedule G of Form 1040. However, if you perform cussed in this article, the In-any substantial services for your ternal Revenue Service may ask any substantial services for your tenant, then the rent becomes business income and should be reported on Schedule C. For example, you may be supplying hotel-type services such as break-fast, laundry or cleaning. If such is the case then you are actually fast, laundry or cleaning. If such is the case, then you are actually receiving payment for the use of both your property and your ser-vices. In effect, you are in the Revenue Service. A copy will be hotel business and must report sent to you together with your your income as business income. income tax forms.
