hard, the parents who made costumes, and all the young participants. The group sang a song that I hadn't heard since childhood. It went something like this, "Fathers make a home sweet home, Fathers make a home sweet home, Fathers make a home sweet home, Fathers make a home sweet home."

Then in unison, "We'll be singing, Glory, Glory! We'll be singing, Glory, Glory! We'll be singing, Glory, Glory! Over yonder's ocean."

Then I remember so well. I'm going to have to sneak off somewhere where scorners won't scoff and small children won't scare and have myself a mess of singing.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON and CHURCH DIRECTORY!

International Union Sunday School Lessons BY DR. KENNETH J. FOREMAN

Day of the Lord Lesson for May 20, 1962

THESE lines are typed in faith. There is perhaps no more than an even probability that they will ever be printed. What with all the preparations for total destruction which are being made in Russia and America, and all the ways in which a war (again one of total destruction) can be started by sheer accident, one chilling sentence from I Peter seems to fit the situation: The end of all things is at hand.

Yet it is possible that these lines will be printed; and if the world lasts that long, we may be thankful. But if the world continues, fear will continue too, and crisis will follow crisis as far as eye can see. People will be asking, as they are asking now: Is this the end of the world?

No time—tables We should remember that while an atomic catastrophe (you could not call it war) might well mean the end of the United States, the end of Russia and of Europe, the end of all we know as civilization, and the plunging of the rest of the race back into darkest barbarism,—that is still not the clean sweep to which the Bible looks forward. Second Peter and Jude, for instance, both picture a total destruction not only of the human race in its present form, but of the earth itself. By comparison with that, the disappearance of a civilization is a slight affair.

Now the writers of the New Testament, if you could have said to them, "It looks as if civilization is on its last legs," would have said, "Of course that's true." But they would not have fretted or feared for a moment. When the End came, most people would be terrified; but they did not expect Christians to be afraid. On the other hand, the early Christian apostles and teachers re-
