

RECENT FIRE DESTROYS BUILDING AT JUVENILE CENTER

Firemen from surrounding areas came to the assistance of Black Mountain's volunteer firemen when they needed help in combating the blaze which demolished this building on the grounds of the Juvenile Evaluation Center recently. Since all these buildings are frame material and the theater was connected by a breezeway to the others, firemen spent their efforts in containing the fire in this one building, thus saving all others. —Photo by June Glenn Jr.

HEALTH TIPS

Many millions of Americans will take to the fields and forests this fall to hunt everything from cottontail rabbits to Canadian moose. At least 200 of these hunters will be brought back dead. They'll be killed in accidents involving guns.

And back of almost every hunting accident is one cause, carelessness. Today's Health, the magazine of the American Medical Association, offers some basic pointers that will help you both to return unharmed from your hunting trip and to avoid bagging a fellow hunter.

Know what you're firing at before you pull the trigger. Be certain that the rustle in the brush actually is a deer and not another hunter.

Never climb through or over a fence with a loaded gun. Unload the gun, then reload after you've crossed. Don't shoot at a flat, hard surface. Ricocheting bullets can kill or wound at long distances. Never look down the barrel of a gun to see whether it's loaded. You can't tell by looking down the barrel anyway, and there's always the chance of an accident. Always carry a gun so that you control the direction of the muzzle even if you stumble. Keep the safety on until you're ready to shoot.

Keep guns away from children. Never leave a weapon unattended without first unloading it. Store guns and ammunition safely out of the reach of children.

Unload guns carried into camp or home. Keep guns cased until reaching the hunting area. Always be sure the barrel is clear of obstructions, such as mud or snow.

Alcohol and guns definitely don't mix. Avoid drinking while you're carrying a loaded gun. Above all, treat a gun with respect. Never point it at a human. It might go off.

breaking a Federal law — and making it difficult or impossible for another person to receive a monthly income while totally disabled, or after retirement, or payments to be made to survivors after an untimely death.

You may be, that is, if you have a household employee whose wages are not being reported as required by the social security law.

Let's start at the beginning. Cash wages paid to household workers in most cases are covered by social security. This includes housekeepers, laundresses, cooks, maids, and other workers who perform services of a household nature in or about a private home.

This means that through their work, household workers earn social security protection against loss of income due to retirement, death, or disability.

Therefore, if you employ a "domestic" and pay her (or him) a total of $50 or more cash wages in a calendar quarter, you must report the wages and pay the social security tax on them. A calendar quarter is a 3-month period beginning with the first day of January, April, July, or October. Cash wages include carfare, if paid in cash, but not room and board.

The social security tax is 3 5/8 percent of the employee's wages. The employer withholds this much from his employee's wages, pays an equal amount himself, and sends a report with the tax payment to the Internal Revenue Service.

tional Revenue Service after the end of each calendar quarter. These reports are then credited to the individual employee's account. Each earnings determine the worker's eligibility for social security benefits and the amount of those benefits. Obviously, the earnings must be reported—and reported correctly—if the worker is to receive credit on his social security record.

Because social security provides benefits under certain circumstances for a worker's dependents, an entire family might be deprived of a monthly income if his earnings are not properly reported by his employer.

Simple directions and convenient forms for reporting easily and correctly can be obtained at any social security district office or Internal Revenue office.

The employer who reports his domestic workers promptly and correctly is helping to provide future security and protection for his employees and their families. He is also doing his part to make social security a better and more efficient program.
