

THE RIGHT—It was good news for Capus Waynick of High Point, special assistant to the governor on racial matters, when he broke the news that there will be more and more demonstrations throughout North Carolina as the year progresses. He knows where the speakers—and anticipates that will come in the summer.

In fact, the only thing holding up this activity now is the race for Governor. If incidents were to break loose between now and May 30, the primary, this State would easily become another Alabama, Little Rock, or Mississippi.

As of right now, there is no easy peace. And, while Waynick says the demonstrations will be "peaceful", they can guarantee that demonstrations have been held with violence, but this can be easily ascertained from the news and the police have to keep demonstrators and their opponents in control of themselves.

There is some fear that demonstrators—and particularly those expected to go along with the opening schools in September—will drive the State into the republican column. So, if Democrats have much in common with Negro leaders, there is an abundance of evidence they have. They may see the demonstrations postponed until after the General Election in November.

But, as of right now the situation looks rather dangerous.

REBUILDING—Thad Eure's steakhouse—called the "Big Barn"—is rebuilding its favorite hangout of the city last time burned the ground, stalls and all, in February.

We hope the fact that it is up, or down, in smoke will not interfere with their separation of charcoal steaks. Their reckless abandon with these things made them the target of our way of thinking, on the side of Kansas City.

STILL GOING—Although the Forest Basketball Coach, McKimney has definitely decided not to resign, it still seems to be trouble.
