Clean Rooms Thoroughly

By Beginning at the Top By JULIE BENDER N. C. State University When planning to clean a room "from top to bottom", do just that beginning with the ceiling. Start by dusting it with a vacuum brush attachment or a long-handled mop covered with a clean cloth to remove loose dirt and dust particles, say agricultural extension specialists at North Carolina State University. Fill one pail with warm water and detergent and another pail with clean, warm rinse water. Protect furniture by covering with a plastic sheet. Then spread out newspapers to protect the floor. With a sudsy cloth or sponge, wash as much of the ceiling as can be reached comfortably while standing on a sturdy ladder. Never overreach! Instead, move the ladder frequently. When one segment of the ceiling is clean, rinse with a sponge wrung out of clean rinse water. Avoid leaving marks between sections of the ceiling.

Conserve Vegetable Nutrients

By JULIE BENDER N. C. State University Important nutrients in vegetables are often lost during the cooking process. Three ways to conserve them are to reduce the amount of water used in cooking, reduce the length of the cooking period and reduce the amount of surface area exposed, say agricultural extension specialists at North Carolina State University. Vitamin C dissolved in water becomes weakened by exposure to air and can be destroyed by heat. If cabbage is chopped up to make slaw, but is left standing on the counter for an hour before serving, much of the original vitamin C is destroyed by the air. So, freshly cut cabbage is better for you than the same amount of cabbage boiled for 2 hours with corned beef. Heat hastens the destruction of vitamin C. Always use a minimum of water to cook vegetables and serve vegetables as promptly as possible to retain the most nutrients.
