

Season sneaks up on some gardeners

The gardening season has a way of sneaking up on you in North Carolina. You can't go by the weather. It's still cold outside, but the ideal planting dates for some crops have already passed.

The best times to plant some others are rapidly approaching.

You can still plant carrots and head lettuce and expect to harvest a reasonable crop.

Here are some other suggested ideal planting dates -- remember to adjust these to your section of the state:

March - April 1-kale, kohlrabi, leaf lettuce, mustard. Each of these can also be planted for a fall crop in August.

Feb. 1 - April 1-cabbage plants (also Aug. 1-15); March 1-15 and July 1-Aug. 15-cauliflower; Feb. 1- March 1-15-Irish potato; Feb. 1-April 15-radish and turnip (fall crops possible, too); Feb. 1-April 1-rutabaga (also July 1-Aug. 1).

After these come the "semi-early" planted crops such as snap beans, corn, summer squash and watermelon all beginning about April 15. About five days later is the best time to start planting cantaloupe, cucumber and tomato plants.

Delay until about May 1 those crops that require the warmer temperatures, such as lima beans, eggplant, okra, pepper plants, southern peas, and pumpkin.

You can plant two crops of many of these home garden vegetables, and it is often preferable to stagger plantings so all of the crop won't be ready to harvest at the same time.

For detailed information on dates and varieties, check with your local county extension office.
